FLUID EXTRACTS.

The attention of Pharmacutists is called to my new method of manufacturing FLUID EXTRACTS, as published in the September, (1869) and January, (1870) numbers of the American Journal of Pharmacy, as embracing an important feature and desideratum in the entire avoidance of heat in their manipulation, yielding a perfect and one of the most reliable products yet produced in the form of Fluid Extracts. The relative strength is the same as the Pharmacopœia from which we will not deviate only in our mode of manipulation and in the use of GLYCERIN. We are now prepared to supply the trade with these Fluid Extracts on the most liberal terms.

Do Your Own Printing.

The reputation of the NOVELTY JOB PRINTING PRESS is thoroughly established, as meeting all the requirements of a first-class press with which to "do your own printing," and as being second to none for the use of general Job Printers. Many Printers are using them, and find them most admirably adapted for job work. Many young men have bought them, and are doing all the printing for the house which employs them, thereby materially adding to their salaries. TRADERS and MANUFACTURERS are finding them great aids to their business. Principals of Schools are finding them very useful assistants; and boys are finding them a never-failing source of instruction, pleasure and profit. Most lads of fourteen, with one of these presses and a few dollars' worth of material, are perfectly capable of doing all the printing for their fathers' business, and will be thereby gaining instruction.

DRUGGISTS' CANNOT EMPLOY A MORE USEFUL ASSISTANT THAN ONE OF THESE PRESSES, AS ABUNDANT TESTIMONY IN POSSESSION OF THE MANUFACTURER CLEARLY PROVES.

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 16, 1869.

MR. BENJ. O. WOODS. Dear Sir: We have used one of your Novelty Presses for the past six months, and have done all the printing required in putting up "Hutchins's Headache and Cathartic Pills." We are perfectly satisfied with the press, and heartily recommend it to our brother Druggists as the most valuable convenience they can add to their store furniture.

PREFACE.

JUST as the bare and naked skeleton is less complete and perfect than the form rounded into beauty and symmetry by sinews, and muscles, and flesh; and just as the desolate trunk and leafless branches of a tree in winter, are less attractive than the same trunk and branches clad in the bright foliage of the summer—so must our work be less complete and perfect, and less attractive than the many extended treatises that clothe their subjects in all the fulness of detail. It will be our business to construct skeletons—to sift out from the multitude of legal maxims, precepts, and decisions, relating to the subjects treated upon, such general principles as will be valuable to men of business, in the particular line indicated by the title of this volume. And the fact that thousands of pages have been considered necessary to give, in full detail, all that is important referring to the matters considered in this work, must be our only apology for its imperfections and deficiencies. If, as we believe will be the case, what is written shall be found to be true, and shall assist those who have but little time to devote to legal research, in obtaining a knowledge of their duties, rights, and liabilities, under the law, our object will have been accomplished.

ESTABLISHED 1830.

Prof. Jos. Leidy, of the University of Pa., says: "After examining many samples, it affords me pleasure to recommend your Oil I am satisfied a purer and more efficacious article cannot be obtained."

Numerous eminent physicians attest the same fact; and among these are the names of Dr. Samuel Jackson, of University of Pa. and Drs. Mutter, Darrach, Harlow, Ludlow, Knight, and others of Philadelphia, Dr. Joshua Gore, of Bloomfield, Ky., and Dr. Jas Adolphus, of Logansport, Indiana.

No combinations are necessary in administering our Oil, it being perfectly sweet and palatable. Physicians may rely, also, upon its certain purity. It is prepared from fresh and healthy livers of the Cod only, inspected personally and bottled directly under our eye

The Jurisprudence of Pharmacy.

CHAPTER I.

THE LAWS RELATING TO VENDORS OF DRUGS.

IT is proposed, in the following pages, to present, in a necessarily condensed form, a statement of those legal principles which have a special bearing upon the manufacturers, compounders, and dispensers of drugs, with some notice of the laws relating to the manufacture and sale of articles often found associated therewith. The information furnished will, it is hoped, be sufficient to enable persons following those pursuits to understand in how far their rights and liabilities are marked and peculiar.

As a matter of course, the various rules of the common and statute law relating to those engaged in mercantile and other business—such, for example, as the laws applying to partnerships, agencies, and bailments—have more or less bearing upon the dealer in drugs; but limited space will prevent their consideration here, to any greater extent than will be necessary in the discussion of the particular liability of those for whom this work is intended.

There appear to have been but comparatively few decisions determining the exact position of those who deal in drugs in various ways. And the statute laws of most of the States are silent upon points, legislation as to which could not fail to be beneficial. However insignificant the business may have been originally, at the present time it is one of the utmost importance. While the conduct of most employments effects only the property of individuals, the science of pharmacy, in its practical applications, bears directly upon human health and life. It deals with many substances which have the power permanently to injure one, and forcibly to take away the other. The absence of adjudication and legislation, then, is certainly not owing to a want of importance in the subject, but probably to the fact that the rights and liabilities of persons engaged in the business are from legal principles analogous to those which apply to other pursuits, with which principles the legal profession is well acquainted. In the words of the old proverb "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and it is certainly proper that pharmacutists should have at least a partial knowledge of their responsibilities, and of the light in which they stand under the law. Such information in this little treatise, necessarily abbreviated in its form, and imperfect in its execution, will aim to impart. And, as it is written for men outside of the profession, the attempt will be made to maintain correctness in the statement of the laws, rather than technical nicety of language.

We will first consider the legal status of vendors of drugs. In former times, a distinction was recognized between the sphere of the druggist and that of the apothecary. The former term was applied to those who simply bought and sold drugs and chemicals, without compounding or fitting them for use as medicines; while the name of apothecary was given to all those who practiced the profession of pharmacy, and by the combination and preparation of drugs and chemicals, rendered them proper to be employed in overcoming disease. The latter were, of course, regarded as being possessed of a higher degree of skill than those who simply dealt in uncompounded articles. But the custom, so general in the United States, of uniting both branches of business in the same person, has almost annulled the importance of the distinction, and the terms will be often used, in these pages, as synonymous.

We should have to go far back in the world's history to find the first mention that is made of the employment of the apothecary. We read, in the book of Exodus, that Moses was commanded to combine the principal spices, and make thereof "an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the apothecary;" and again, to make "a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy." In later days, but while the profession of pharmacy was still in its infancy, and the number of drugs recognized as of use was comparatively small, the business of dispensing them was generally done by the grocers. While some of these undoubtedly took pains to become conversant with their department of the healing art, still no great amount of knowledge was considered as necessary to engage in it. But as the profession was expanded, and probably after many serious mistakes had resulted from the want of a systematic course of pharmaceutical training, the necessity of a separation was recognized, and encouragements were given to the cultivation of a proper amount of information in those to whose hands the powerful agents were entrusted. At the present time, when the dispensing of drugs bears such an intimate relationship to the public safety, the fact is everywhere recognized that the apothecary y's stock in trade consists no less in the knowledge as to how he should handle drugs and chemicals, than in the bare ownership of them.

When we come to examine the obligations under which men are placed, we find a general principle running through all occupations and pursuits in life. That is this: the law requires from men engaged in the various departments of business the exercise of an amount of skill and carefulness proportioned to the importance of the bearing their pursuits have upon the public welfare. The liability is proportioned to the responsibility. There are, in many of the States, laws regulating the keeping on hand and sale of powder, because of the capacity it has to cause destruction, when care is not exercised. So, also, common carriers are held to a strict accountability for all accidents occurring through any negligence on their part, on account of the dangerous agencies that they employ. Vendors of provisions and supplies intended for household consumption, dealing as they do in substances having a most intimate connection with human life and health, have ever over their heads the liability that follows the breach of their implied warranty. To allow all those who may choose to do so to engage in business in which negligence or want of skill is certain to cause damage to others, without holding them responsible for such damage, would be to turn a flood of evil loose upon the land. While there should be as little restriction as possible placed upon the right of each and every one to engage in whatever lawful pursuit he may select, still in some cases the public welfare demands that the complete liberty of individuals shall be so limited as that it may work no evil to others. And there can be nothing more reasonable than that such qualifications shall be demanded of those who deal in dangerous articles as will prevent those articles from becoming a source of mischief and evil in the community.

The statutes of some of the States require physicians, lawyers, pilots, engineers, etc., to be examined and licensed before they can be entrusted with the important affairs of their various pursuits and professions. These laws thus propose to close the door on all who do not possess the requisite qualifications. But in dealing with druggists and apothecaries, they take a different course, or rather the common law does so, since the statute laws in general have but little to say as to their status. All who choose may engage in the various pursuits of pharmacy, but they are held strictly responsible for injury caused by their ignorance or neglect in those pursuits. Thus very much the same end is reached as by the laws of prohibition. The enactment of statutes requiring that all those who undertake the compounding, dispensing, or manufacturing of drugs should be regularly examined and licensed, might be beneficial, not only to the public at large, but to the trade itself, for it would have a tendency to increase that confidence which has been somewhat shaken by the frequent mistakes made in the business. But the best education an apprentice can receive, is the practice of the pursuit, and as long as that is done under the direct supervision of old and experienced hands, injury will seldom result. Legislation prohibiting the dispensing of drugs by any except those proved, on examination, to be well informed, would shut off the principal method of obtaining that information; but we think that the step will be eventually generally taken throughout the country, and probably no great detriment to the trade will result.

From the fact that so many drugs and medicines possess the power to injure the health, and even destroy life, when improperly used, it may be implied that the law requires unusual care and skill in those who dispense them. There are comparatively few at the present day, outside of the business, who have an extensive acquaintance with their nature and properties; and when those who are ignorant in this respect enter the shop of an apothecary to purchase, they trust to his superior skill, expecting that he will select for them the required articles, and furnish them in good condition. This confidence they have a legal right to place in him, and he is legally wrong if he abuses it; for, by opening his store and exposing his sign, he proclaims to the world that he is possessed of the requisite information, and will use that, and the necessary degree of carefulness, in favor of all who come to him for medicine. If he has not that skill, or does not use proper care, and, from the want of either, damage follows, the law will hold him liable; for he should not have invited the public to trust to him, when he was without the qualifications which would fit him to engage in the business. No one is compelled to hold himself out to the world as being proficient in difficult branches of business; but having done so, he must take the burden with the reward—the liability with the profit. When a person employs an attorney to conduct a case in court, he has a right to expect that he will use ordinary care in the conduct of the cause; and if, through his want of such care, or of such an amount of legal knowledge as a lawyer should be possessed of, the client lose the suit, he may hold the other liable for the damages that have resulted.

It will be well, in this connection, to refer to the bearing which the doctrine of implied warranty has upon the subject. In the circulars and public advertisements of druggists and chemists, we often read that “all drugs are warranted sound and pure,” or words to the like effect. This express warranty, however, adds nothing to the liability of the person offering it, for the law will imply one in nearly all cases of the sale of drugs and medicines. A short time spent in examining the nature and application of the principle of warranties will show plainly why this is so.

In almost all contracts of sale and purchase, in the absence of words which the law will construe as an express warranty, the rule caveat emptor applies; that is, let the buyer take care that he secure what he desires, and the value of the amount he pays. When a person purchases an article which he has an opportunity to examine fully, he cannot look to the vendor if it does not prove to be what he thought it, unless a warranty has been given, or fraud has been used. Professor Parsons says, as to sales, that "where the means of knowledge is accessible to both parties, each must judge for himself, and it is neither the duty of the vendor to communicate to the vendee any superior knowledge he may have of the value of the commodity, nor of the vendee to disclose to the vendor any facts which he may have, rendering the property more valuable than the vendor supposed." It is the privilege of the buyer to demand a warranty, and refuse to purchase without one; and if he neglects to do this, he must bear the consequences. But this rule of law, placing the risk upon the buyer, does not apply to sales of provisions, and articles intended for immediate consumption as food. The reason for this is found in the intimate relation which those articles bear to the public safety. The man who sells them is required to take care that all those that go to the consumer shall be good and wholesome; for their whole object and use is to contribute to good health and the support of life; and if, by reason of their being tainted or imperfect, damage is done to either, the seller is liable. Another exception to the rule of caveat emptor applies to those cases where the vendor alone possesses the requisite means of information. If the circumstances are such that the purchaser is compelled to rely upon the superior knowledge of the seller, without any examination on his part of the thing offered for sale, it is held that the vendor impliedly warrants that such things sold are what the buyer might reasonably suppose them to be. We quote again from "Parsons on Contracts," vol. 1, page 583, as follows: "A requirement that the purchaser should 'beware,' or should take care to ascertain for himself the quality of the thing he buys, becomes utterly unreasonable under circumstances which make such care impossible. If, therefore, the seller alone possesses the requisite knowledge, or the means of knowledge, and offers his goods for sale under circumstances which compel the purchaser to rely upon the judgment and honesty of the seller, without any examination on his own part as to the quality of the thing offered, it has been held that the rule of caveat emptor does not apply, because it cannot apply, and that the seller warrants that the goods he offers for sale are, in respect to their qualities, what the purchaser may fairly understand them to be; in other words, that they are of merchantable value, and proper subjects of trade."

Within both these exceptions to the rule, placing upon the purchaser the burden, it will be seen that the cases of sales by druggists and apothecaries of the goods that belong more especially to their line will fall. For, in the first place, as drugs and medicines, in their effects, have a still more powerful influence on the health and life than provisions, those dealing in them are held by the law to the same obligation to furnish only those that are sound and competent to perform their appropriate mission. Again, under the second exception, it is an undeniable fact that most of those who purchase drugs have but little knowledge of them, and few are able to distinguish those that are poisonous in their nature from those that are entirely harmless. In buying, they rely entirely upon the knowledge and skill of the seller; and the law requires that he shall not abuse that confidence by dealing out to them deteriorated or unsound articles. If the vendor of the various substances that are used for food, intended to be consumed by others, is an insurer of the fact that they shall be wholesome, it may be readily imagined that much the same liability will follow those who deal in substances, many of which are poisonous, and, if taken as a medicine, may impair health and destroy life. The public are more completely blindfolded in their contracts for the purchase of drugs and chemicals than in almost any other they can make; for they can, by the exercise of the various senses, generally gain some idea of the quality and properties of the articles they buy; but faith and confidence enter strongly into their dealings with the apothecary.

A person may, without doubt, if he choose, purchase deteriorated or inferior drugs, just as he may any other article; but if the seller wishes to escape the implied warranty that they are sound and good, he must make it appear that the inferiority of the thing sold was expressly considered in the agreement, and understood by the vendee. If, however, drugs are purchased with the understanding that they are to be used for some other purpose than the ordinary method in which they are employed, as, for example, in the arts, then it is presumed that the law would not hasten to presume a warranty by the vendor. Under such circumstances, the grounds upon which the law implies such a warranty would not exist, as there would be nothing dangerous to life or health in the mere selling of chemicals for such use. The same general principles as to warranties have their full bearing in the dealings between the manufacturing pharmacist, or wholesale dealer, and the retail druggist. Although both parties may have a full knowledge of the science of pharmacy, and of the nature of drugs, still, if the stock is bought to be compounded or sold again as medicines, there is an implied warranty as to the quality, in the absence of any different understanding between vendor and vendee. In short, then, it may be laid down as a rule, that the sale of drugs for medicinal use carries with it an implied engagement on the part of the seller, that they are of good quality, and proper in kind; and for any damage resulting from the breach of this engagement, the vendor will have to answer.

Having thus considered the doctrine of warranties, and remembering the bearing which it has upon our whole subject, let us look at the amount of information which the law requires that dealers in drugs and chemicals shall possess, and the amount of carefulness that it exacts from them. There is a distinction in this respect between mere vendors of these articles, uncompounded, and apothecaries, who, by preparing and combining them, fill prescriptions. The consideration of the liabilities of the latter will be deferred, and reserved for its proper place.

Vendors of drugs, in the first place, should be acquainted with their nature and properties. For at least one of the parties to a transaction which puts powerful agencies in a position where they may possibly work evil, should have sufficient information to guard against it; and, as the purchaser is generally ignorant, the requisite knowledge is supposed to reside in the seller. If a druggist deliver to a person wishing a particular article, that article possessing all its natural and appropriate qualities unimpaired, he will not be liable for injury following its use—that is, in the absence of statutes forbidding the sale of poisonous substances. But if a drug, originally harmless in its nature, is liable, after a certain length of time, to contract poisonous and dangerous properties, it is the business of the apothecary to be informed of that fact. In such case, he will be answerable for any injury resulting to one who obtained it from him, supposing it to be pure and harmless. The plea of ignorance will not excuse him, for it is just upon such points that the law requires he shall be informed. If, however, the change had been produced in such a manner that no ordinary amount of information or care would have given him a knowledge of it, he would not, it is presumed, be responsible for harm that might result. For example, if an extraordinary state of the atmosphere, in a particular place, had caused a drug, originally possessed of no power to damage, to absorb certain poisonous substances, and become noxious, the druggist would not, probably, be held liable for the consequences that might follow the use of it by a person who had purchased it from him. It must be expressly understood, however, that this would be true only in cases where the greatest amount of skill and care in the exercise of the profession could not have anticipated or discovered the change in the nature of the drug. For the law presumes that the apothecary is sufficiently well-acquainted with the qualities of the articles in which he deals, to be able to guard against any ordinary accidents. Ignorance, when he should have been informed, and mistakes, where he should have exercised caution, are excuses for which the courts have but little charity.

It is hardly necessary to say that the vendor of drugs will be held responsible, civilly, at least, for the mistakes of those whom he employs. He should, therefore, take pains to entrust his business with those only who are possessed of such qualifications as will render the occurring of such mistakes unlikely. Should a clerk in a drug store, in the course of his employment, through negligence, mingle a poisonous substance with one harmless, or comparatively so, in its nature, and thereby cause injury to a purchaser, he would render his master liable for damages. A principal is liable for the torts of his agent, that are done in the natural course of the agency. If, however, the clerk should wilfully, and outside of the routine of his duties, thus intermingle the drugs, it is presumed that he alone would be liable, since a man is not usually answerable for wrongs committed by his servants, unless they have been done in the course of his business, or he has in some way contributed thereto, or afterwards ratified them. The employer will not be criminally responsible for the wrongs committed by those whom he employs, as a general thing. But if he has authorized or coöperated in the misdeeds of his agent, the criminal liability, as well as the civil, will attach to him. Thus it was decided, in one case cited in Blackstone's Commentaries, "that if a baker direct his servant to make bread containing a specific quantity of alum, which, when mixed with other ingredients, is innoxious, but in the execution of these orders the agent mixes up the drug in so unskilful a way that the bread becomes unwholesome, the master will be liable to be indicted." The circumstances under which a druggist may be held criminally responsible, will be more particularly considered hereafter.

Particular care should be taken that all those employed in drug establishments shall be able to read the names or labels on the bottles or vessels containing the various substances. Any error in this respect would be regarded as entirely inexcusable. This, again, is a department of knowledge of which those outside of the profession are usually ignorant, but which the law considers that those engaged in the trade possess, in a degree sufficient to render almost impossible any errors therein. Confusion in the position of the various articles should also be avoided. In one case, by a mistake of the clerk, a poisonous drug was dealt out, instead of the simple and harmless substance asked for. Upon the trial of the suit, brought for damages, it was proved that the store was dark, it being a very cloudy day, and that the two bottles stood near each other on the shelf; and, therefore, the defendant claimed that the mistaking of one for the other did not imply such negligence as should render him liable. But it was decided that the defences relied on were not sufficient to exonerate, and that the apothecary had not exercised that caution which the nature of his stock demanded. If necessary, in order to secure the safety of the public, the law will require that each bottle shall have a shelf of its own, and that a dozen lights be kept burning continually.

There are, of course, accidents which no reasonable amount of human foresight can guard against. The law does not demand that the dealer in drugs shall exercise superhuman foresight, but only requires from him such a degree of prudence and caution as the character of the substances he handles renders necessary. If, for example, wishing to dispose of a lot of damaged drugs, he should bury them in a remote place, where no ordinary agency could disturb them, and an unusual flood should remove the earth from them so that cattle were poisoned, he would not, probably, be held liable. In this case, however, as well as in all similar ones, the liability would depend upon the care exercised, in view of the possibility that damage might result to others. And the throwing of poisonous substances into a stream, used below for various purposes, would be such an unlawful act as would make the person so doing responsible for resulting injuries.

The druggist should also exercise caution in taking the orders of buyers. He should be certain, when he delivers a drug, that he is furnishing that for which the purchaser asks. If he does so, as a matter of course, he cannot be answerable for the consequences, although the vendee intended to ask for and use an entirely different thing; for it would not be possible for the apothecary to know what the other had in his mind, different from what his language expressed. But if, through inattention, recklessness, or any other fault on his part, he mistake the purchaser's order, he is to blame, and liable for consequential evil. For the buyer, having asked plainly for what he desired, and being ignorant as to the difference in the external appearance of the substances, uses the articles, relying upon his implied contract with the druggist that they are the same as represented. If a person asks for anything indistinctly, he should be required to repeat his desires; and if, after questioning fully, any reasonable doubt remains in the mind of the dealer as to what he wishes, nothing should be furnished him, especially when it is thought that he may be seeking for powerful chemicals.

Care should also be used in the employment of the various utensils and vessels of the trade, so that the different articles be not unintentionally mixed with each other. Dispensing pharmacists are probably more liable to accidents of this class than those who deal in the mere naked drug, and the examination of this subject will be deferred until the compounding of prescriptions is considered.

Again, where labels are placed upon vessels containing medicines, as is often and very properly done, great pains should be taken to have them correct. Injury caused by error in this respect very often, if not always, comes back upon the dealer. Take, for the purpose of illustration, the following case: A person residing in a State, the laws of which require all poisons dispensed to be distinctly marked as such, wishing to use a substance of that nature, obtains it from an apothecary, who, by mistake, places the label of a harmless drug upon the bottle. The purchaser, not noticing but that it is properly marked, after using what he wishes, puts the balance away. Some time afterwards a member of the family, desiring to employ the drug indicated by the label upon the bottle containing poison, takes that in the bottle, and death results. Here, undoubtedly, the druggist is liable, civilly and criminally, for the injury has resulted as the natural consequence of his failure to do that which the law required of him. There might perhaps be more room for argument if such a case occurred in the absence of any law requiring the marking of poisons. But we think that whether any statute demanded that that should be done or not, the placing of a false label upon a bottle under such circumstances, would be putting such a trap in the way of others, that the person so doing would be held strictly responsible.

A very strong reason why dealers in drugs should be well informed as to the duties of their business, and particular in the fulfilment of them, lies in the fact that for some breaches of the trust reposed in them by the public, they may be held criminally responsible. The crime of murder can seldom be laid at their door, for that, in the legal acceptance, implies and includes a malice aforethought, that apothecaries, as such, can seldom be supposed to be guilty of. But they may so carelessly dispense poisonous articles as to bring upon themselves the guilt and punishment of manslaughter. It is true that the serious accidents which too frequently occur, are the result generally of errors and mistakes; but that some of them, at least, will be regarded as crimes in the eye of the law, the following definition will show. Manslaughter is thus defined: "The killing of a human being, while the slayer is engaged in an unlawful act, not felonious, or in doing a lawful act in an unlawful manner." The business of selling and dispensing drugs is certainly a lawful one, but when so carried on as to cause the death of others, it may become a crime. In one case, in speaking of involuntary manslaughter, the following was laid down as a definition: "It is where it plainly appears that neither death nor any great harm was intended, but death is accidentally caused by some unlawful act not amounting to felony, or an act not strictly unlawful in itself, but done in an unlawful manner, and without due caution." Under this head it will be seen that nearly all the cases where death is caused by the mistakes and errors of druggists will fall. Numerous instances might be mentioned in which, through mistake or ignorance, poisons have been administered with fatal effect, in the place of medicines much less powerful, intended to have been given. Oftentimes, as the error was most bitterly repented of, and there was none of that malicious intention that is so odious in the sight of the law, no prosecution has taken place.

The apothecary is not liable criminally (as we have seen he is not civilly) in every case where a person dies in consequence of receiving the wrong drug from him. If, without any fault of his, or want of proper care, a poison should become mixed in medicine delivered, it would be a simple misadventure, exposing him to no liability. But as such mistakes can seldom occur where the appropriate skill is exercised, and care used, it may be safely laid down as true, that when death results from the use of the wrong drug, given through the error of the dealer, he is liable for manslaughter, either voluntary or involuntary, according to the grossness of the negligence or want of skill, and the accompanying circumstances.

The statutes of some of the States have prescribed certain rules regulating the sale of poisons within their limits; and, of course, where these laws exist, they must be strictly followed. The Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, in the year 1860, enacted a law, which is still in existence, as follows: "No apothecary, druggist, or other person, shall sell or dispose of, by retail, any morphia, strychnia, arsenic, prussic acid, or corrosive sublimate, except upon the prescription of a physician, or on the personal application of some respectable inhabitant, of full age, of the town or place in which such sale shall be made, and in all cases of such sale, the word 'poison' shall be carefully and legibly marked or placed upon the label, package, bottle, or other vessel or thing in which such poison is contained; and when sold and disposed of otherwise than under the prescription of a physician, the apothecary, druggist, or other person selling or disposing of the same, shall note in a register, kept for that purpose, the name and residence of the person to whom such sale was made, the quantity sold, and the date of such sale; any person offending therein shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding fifty dollars."

The "Report on the Penal Code" of that State, (Pennsylvania,) thus defines the purposes of the foregoing statute: "To prevent mistakes in the sale of noxious drugs, to throw impediments in the way of malicious and wicked persons obtaining them for murderous purposes, and to facilitate the detection of such persons when their malignant purpose has been accomplished. The instances of murder by poison have recently increased to a frightful extent, both in Europe and this country, and such legislation is demanded for the suppression of this crime." It is believed that most of the other States have upon their statute books laws similar in their objects, regulating the sale of poisons. But the general status of the dealer in drugs, the determination of his rights and liabilities, has been left almost entirely to the control of common law principles. Probably this is not as it should be, for were there laws clearly laid down, defining, without margin for mistake or doubt, the privileges and responsibilities of those engaged in the most important branch of business, the result could not fail to be beneficial to the public and satisfactory to the profession.

As to the compensation which vendors of drugs receive, it will be necessary to say but little, as they generally hold the staff in their own hands, and have only competition to fear. But that compensation differs somewhat in its nature from the profit that those engaged in many other branches of business are supposed to make, as in it account is taken of the care and skill necessarily exercised by the druggist. When a keg of nails or a piece of cloth is sold, the price, besides the cost, usually includes a moderate advance for the investment, storing, and handling; but in the sale of drugs, the vendor should receive also some additional compensation for the knowledge he is required to possess, the strict care he is called upon to exercise, and the liability under which the law places him. When a physician or an attorney makes his charge for advice, he bears in mind the outlay of time and money he has been obliged to make in order to gain the information he imparts. So the law, in an action on a quantum meruit or valebant for drugs furnished, in the absence of any established price, would allow the apothecary an additional sum over and above their cost, as a compensation for the extra qualifications that are demanded of him.

The manufacturer and the wholesale dealer stand upon nearly the same footing as the retail vendor, and, therefore, the lengthy discussion of their legal position would not be advisable. Where drugs are intended for use as medicines, the maker of such drugs is under as great an obligation to exercise care and skill as the apothecary, who deals them out directly to the consumer. That there can be no distinctive difference in the responsibility of the two will be easily understood when we consider that it is only when the manufacturer puts into the market unhealthy or damaged articles, that he incurs liability. He may make his wares of as poor materials as he pleases, and may attach labels entirely wrong; but he breaks no law, and places himself under no liability, as long as he keeps them in a position where they can do no harm to others. When he parts with them, by contract of sale, the same implied warranty which accompanies all contracts of vendors of drugs for medicinal use, goes with them. It has become customary with manufacturers of chemicals, etc., to place a label upon the vessels or packages containing their productions, giving the name of the articles, as well as their own. One object in so doing is to give purchasers confidence in the character of the wares, and often marking has this effect. The person thus labelling, in the eyes of the law, makes this statement to the public: "I do hereby warrant that the substance herein contained is that signified by the name attached; that it possesses all, and only, its natural and appropriate qualities, and that it has (at the time of the sale) suffered no deterioration." For any breach of this warranty the person thus putting drugs into the market is liable.

Cases have occurred, one of which will be hereafter detailed at length, in which, through the placing of the label of a harmless drug upon poison, injury was caused to the consumer. Although the article may have passed through several hands, without discovery of its nature, it has been always held that the person mislabelling was liable. For, in such a case, harm to the person using the drug would be the natural consequence, since, although the druggist who deals out such an article should know its nature, still he would be apt to be misled by the label; and the fact that he did not exercise a sufficient amount of care would not release the original wrong-doer. The person who sets in motion an agency that must inevitably work evil, should be held answerable for that evil, although others have been instrumental in enabling it to act. The fact that there is no privity of contract between the consumer, who is injured, and the person who prepares drugs, will not release the latter; for, running through every sale of the article, from the manufacturer to the final purchaser, is the same confidence and implied warranty. The liability of the dealer, of any grade, arises from the command given to him by the law, to so handle and guard the dangerous articles that he puts in circulation, that no harm can come to others, rather than from any direct contract between him and the injured person.

The duties of manufacturing and preparing pharmacutists, then, are plain and easily understood. They should be careful to use such care themselves, and to exact such attention and skill from those in their employ, that only the proper ingredients shall find their way into the various articles; that they shall be good and sound in quality; and that the articles, when ready for distribution, shall be correctly marked. If the drugs are right and proper in their nature and qualities at the time of the first sale, it will be all that will be necessary, unless deterioration afterwards result from the inferior quality of the components which the manufacturer has used, or he has been negligent in putting them up. As a matter of course, where the article was what it should have been when it left his hands, he cannot be held responsible for injury to it, resulting from the influences of the atmosphere, etc.

As to the transactions between dealers, we have already written. If a wholesale dealer or manufacturer, in selling drugs to an apothecary or other retailer, give him a note or bill of sale describing the articles, there arises an implied warranty that the thing sold is, in its nature and qualities, what it is there described to be. The following case will illustrate this principle: "A bill of sale was as follows: 'Henshaw & Co. bought of T. W. S. & Co. two cases indigo—$272.35.' The article proved not to be indigo, but principally Prussian blue. There was no charge of fraud against the vendor, and the article was so prepared as to deceive skilful dealers in indigo. The question was presented as to whether the bill of sale constituted a warranty that the article was indigo. The court, after an able analysis of the cases upon this point, decided in the affirmative."* For any breach of the warranty in this respect, the vendee may sustain an action against the person from whom he purchased.

CHAPTER II.

THE COMPOUNDING OF PRESCRIPTIONS.

ALTHOUGH, as has been stated, the business of compounding prescriptions is usually connected with that of selling simple unmixed drugs, we have thought it better to consider the rights and liabilities of those engaged in the two branches of the trade separately, in order that the distinctions that exist may be more methodically discussed and clearly understood. While all that has been laid down as to the vendor of drugs has also a full application to the compounding apothecary, he is required to exercise a still higher degree of skill in addition. We have seen that the law demands from men engaged in the various trades and professions, qualifications proportioned to the bearing which those occupations have on the general well-being and safety of the public. In every avocation, it requires the use of ordinary care and skill—that is, such as men of ordinary prudence and qualifications would bring to bear in that avocation. The amount, of course, varies. What would be ordinary care and skill in one pursuit, might fall far short in another. The mending of a wagon wheel would require much less than the repairing of a watch, although each is of its own kind and character.

The physician, whose profession gives him such an influence on human life and health, of course, must be under a more strict responsibility than the laborer, who has only to do with inanimate substances. In the requirements of the law as to druggists and apothecaries, (technically speaking,) we may also perceive a distinction. For the amount of knowledge that would be sufficient to enable a dealer to sell bare, unmixed drugs, with safety to himself and the public, might be entirely inadequate to enable him with propriety to compound prescriptions. A dealer in cloths, although well informed as to their nature and qualities, may be entirely lacking in the ability to fit them for use as garments. The druggist should know what the various articles of his stock are; the apothecary should know how to use them.

By holding himself out to the world as a compounder of medicines, then, the dealer places himself under a greater amount of responsibility than attaches to the simple vendor of unmixed drugs. By that act he declares that he is possessed of the requisite knowledge to select, prepare, and combine the various ingredients, according to the wants of the public. In this case, as in that of the druggist, people being generally ignorant as to the nature and qualities of chemicals, trust entirely to the superior wisdom of the vendor. The law requires, therefore, that he shall be so well informed as to the duties of his profession that this confidence will not be misplaced. The apothecary, in the preparation of prescriptions, acts, in a measure, as the commissary of the physician, and his liability is somewhat similar. The latter names certain articles as appropriate in a specific case, and is liable for any damage that may result from the want of the ordinary skill of a physician. The dealer prepares them, and is also answerable for injury caused by his want of ordinary skill in so doing.

Let us examine briefly some of the qualifications demanded particularly from the apothecary as a compounder of drugs and medicines. And, in the first place, he should be acquainted with the language used by physicians in prescribing. Although he may oftentimes prepare medicines from recipes of his own, or in accordance with the directions of outside parties, still a large and most important branch of his business must be the furnishing of substances compounded according to the directions of medical practitioners. It is, therefore, most important that he be able perfectly to understand and carry out their orders. As a matter of course he will be liable if he mistake in compounding a plainly written prescription, even though it be in terms persons outside the profession could not comprehend. It will be hardly necessary to say, therefore, that if any case occurs in which doubts arise in the mind of the apothecary, as to the rendering of any words or part of a prescription, he should refuse to proceed until those doubts are removed. He must always remember that he is the custodian of most dangerous agents, and is under proportionate liability for the exercise of prudence and circumspection.

Some authorities have held that where the physician commits an error in writing the prescription, the druggist is also rendered responsible by compounding it. But this is probably true only where the prescription, as it reads, directs the preparation of a rank and sure poison—one that it would be unsafe to take under any circumstances. The medical attendant is supposed to know the requirements of each patient, and in many instances finds it necessary to order severe remedies; so that the person who prepares the prescription would not necessarily be put upon his guard by noticing the fact that hurtful substances were among the ingredients, unless in such quantities as to be dangerous to life.

To hold the compounding dealer liable under any other circumstances, would certainly not be just.

Too much care cannot be exercised in the selection of the various articles ordered, and the accidents that occur testify that oftentimes far too little is called in play. Harm, caused by the wrong drugs finding their way into prescriptions, will generally return upon the apothecary. As to his liability, the various circumstances of the different instances will have much to do with determining. Upon this point we quote the language of Judge Brewster, in the case of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania against Bower, who had, through carelessness, substituted a poisonous substance for one comparatively harmless, called for by the prescription. He said: "The mixing of medicines for the relief or cure of the sick is clearly a lawful act. But the law requires that no person should attempt to deal out drugs as a matter of business or profit, without competent knowledge or skill. So, too, he must not only possess knowledge and skill, but he should employ these attributes to the best of his ability, and failing herein, he should be held to a strict responsibility. We should deal, however, with human nature as we find it, and hold no man liable as a criminal unless he assume the duty of an employment, knowing that he is incompetent to discharge its functions, or unless, possessing the proper information, he fail to employ it. The test, therefore, lies in the word negligence.

"If a man wholly ignorant of the science of medicine and chemistry undertakes, for profit, to compound a prescription, and poisons another, he might be convicted of voluntary manslaughter. So, too, if ever so expert, he should undertake the same delicate employment, and mix the drugs in the dark, or while in a state of intoxication, and thereby cause death, this might be evidence of such gross negligence as would justify a jury in finding a wanton and reckless disregard of life; and here again the offence would be voluntary manslaughter.

"On the other hand, if the person compounding the prescription was a skilful druggist, and in a proper condition, but, by omitting some minor act of care, occasioned death, he would be guilty of involuntary manslaughter. And still again, if, without any fault or want of proper care, the wrong drug found its way into the medicine compounded, and death resulted, the act would be simple misadventure, and not indictable. * * * * *

"Did the defendant employ reasonable care in the preparation of this medicine? This involves two points: First, his reading of the word referred to; second, his knowledge of the deadly character of the drug he used. For though he innocently mistook the language of the prescription, yet if the exercise of reasonable care would have warned him that he was preparing something which would inevitably kill, it would be criminal in him to go on. The inquiry, then, is not whether he put in the proper drugs, or made a mistake, for his default herein would not necessarily be crime. But the higher and truer test is the presence of reasonable care. A professional man does not insure those who deal with him against all contingencies. He simply contracts to use his skill and intelligence to the best of his ability, and with all due fidelity."

It will be understood, from the above clear exposition of the law, that the measure of criminality will be varied by the circumstances of each case, and that there may be, instances where injury or death results from an improper use of drugs, in which the compounding pharmacist will not be liable. As was before stated, what is required from him is the exercise of such care and skill as reasonable and ordinarily qualified men would use in the business.

To proceed; let us notice the necessity, referred to in the case of vendors of drugs, for caution in the employment of the various utensils of the dispensing department. Pains should be taken that the vessels and implements be so cleansed that none of the ingredients of different prescriptions become mingled. Cases have been quite often reported, in which want of sufficient attention to this point has resulted in most serious consequences to life and health. Even where the particles clinging to the implements are not sufficient, or of a nature to positively injure, still their effect may be to neutralize the intended beneficial influence of the medicines with which they become mingled. Want of ordinary care in this respect; (and the law would imply such want of care, in almost every instance of this kind) will render the apothecary liable. But, although cases have occurred, as has been just stated, where injury has followed negligence here, it hardly seems requisite for us to do more than to refer to the necessity for caution.

The pharmacist, again, should have a knowledge of the quantity of the various medicines proper to be given at any one time, or in any one dose. He should be informed as to the amount of any drug that can be safely administered, bearing in mind the various ages and conditions of health. For, although the apportionment of medicines according to the circumstances of the patient, may belong more properly to the physician, still there are many times when apothecaries undertake this, and when they thus shoulder the burthen, they must bear it carefully. If the druggist doubts his ability to discriminate, it is certainly his privilege, and probably his duty, to refuse to act—and thereby avoid responsibility. If one should undertake to furnish medicine for the cure of a child, and for that purpose should compound the same prescription that had been prepared for a man of full age, to be administered in like doses, he would undoubtedly be liable for resulting injury. The above refers, of course, only to those instances in which the apothecary, for profit, takes upon himself the task of selecting medicines, without waiting for orders from others.

The druggist, in compounding, should also be acquainted with the laws, or rather rules, regulating the combination of the various substances he employs. The union of a certain drug with one substance may produce a medicine that is harmless, while the use of the same with another article, may produce such a change in its nature as to cause it to become a rank poison. Upon these peculiarities of chemical combination, the pharmacist is supposed to be informed, and from the few mistakes of this class that are reported, it is presumed that they generally are so.

It is particularly desirable that the apothecary, in compounding prescriptions, should be so conversant with the nature of his stock, that he may know the liability to change, in character, to which any article may be subject. In preparing medicines, he should be most careful to use the exact substances ordered, possessing only those qualities which properly and ordinarily belong to them. In this connection it may be well to consider, briefly, the position of the apothecary when he has innocently sold a drug that has come into his possession bearing a wrong label, without being aware as to the error, and injury follows its use. As we shall hereafter see, the person making, preparing, or putting up drugs, who mislabels them will be responsible for resulting damage; but will the druggist who uses and dispenses them in good faith, be under the same liability? This is a point upon which a number of difficult questions may arise, and in the absence of decisions that would be recognized as of universal authority, we can only give views supported by what are considered as binding principles of law.

The circumstances under which the error referred to can occur, may vary considerably. If a druggist, in preparing a medicine, should improperly use as one of its ingredients a poisonous substance, the plea that the package or vessel from which he took it bore the label of a different drug—which label was placed there by the manufacturer—would not excuse him. For, in such case he would have an opportunity to examine the ingredients, and it would undoubtedly be his duty to do so. To attempt the compounding of prescriptions without possessing sufficient knowledge to render an examination of their components effectual, would, as has been already stated, certainly render him liable. And, again, in thus selling drugs he deals directly with the consumer, and impliedly warrants the good quality of the substances he employs in preparing the articles sold.

But questions of greater difficulty arise when we consider the liability of the dealer who sells in unbroken packages. If a manufacturer issue sealed bottles containing or supposed to contain a certain drug, and a person ask for and obtain from the druggist into whose hands some of them have passed, a bottle of that specific medicine by that manufacturer, it would seem that there might be room for doubt as to whether the retailer would be liable for injury resulting from the presence in it of hurtful substances or properties. For the purchaser chooses to rely upon the manufacturer, and cannot reasonably suppose that the druggist, who does not open and examine the packages, undertakes to warrant the quality of the contents. But there are those who hold different opinions; and where there are laws forbidding the sale of poisons, the apothecary would not be shielded by the fact that he sold such an article unwittingly in the original unbroken package, and upon the credit of the maker. This subject will be referred to again.

Having prepared his prescriptions, the apothecary, if he place any label whatever upon them, must be careful to use the proper one. This marking is customary, very proper, and indeed, in some cases is required by law. The same general principles as to the negligence that will render parties liable, in the other branches of the business, will also apply here. The case of Walsh vs. Lobeck, tried a short time since, although not carried into the Supreme Court of the State, (Pennsylvania,) presented rather an interesting question of fact. The defendant, an apothecary, had compounded two prescriptions for the plaintiff, and the ground of the action was, that he had put upon one bottle the label which should have been placed upon the other, through which error damage had been done to the plaintiff. The defence claimed that the evidence did not establish the fact that the mistake had been made by the druggist. They proved that the bottles had been placed by the plaintiff, or his agents, in a bowl of water for some purpose, and asserted that the action of the fluid had removed the label, and that in endeavoring to replace it, the mistake had been made by the attendants. The jury, after having retired, sent for a bowl of water, and tried its effects upon a label; when they found that the water actually did cause it to cleave from the bottle after a short time. They returned a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that it had not been sufficiently proved that he was the party at fault in marking. Had that been established, there could have been no room for doubt as to his liability.

While upon the subject of the injury resulting from the incorrect labelling of drugs, it will be proper to look at the position in which the law places the manufacturing or preparing pharmacist, who sends forth a substance improperly marked, and thus causes injury. In the case of Thomas vs. Winchester,

C. J. Ruggles stated the principles of law bearing upon this point at large, and probably as they are generally recognized and acknowledged.

The action was brought by Mary A. Thomas, against the defendant, to recover damages caused by his negligence in putting up and labelling a certain drug. The physician of the plaintiff prescribed a dose of dandelion, and her husband purchased what he supposed to be that substance from an apothecary; but it proved, instead, to be extract of belladonna—a deadly poison. As a consequence, the plaintiff received great injury to her health, and her life was despaired of for some time. The jar from which the medicine was taken was labelled “dandelion,” and marked as “prepared by A. Gilbert.” The apothecary believed the label to be correct, and sold the article as the extract of dandelion. He had purchased it from J. S. Aspinwall, a druggist in New York, who had bought it of the defendant as the extract of dandelion, according to the purport of the label. The defendant was a dealer in vegetable extracts, used for medicinal purposes, some of which he manufactured, and some he bought. All, however, when put up for sale, were labelled as “prepared by A. Gilbert.”

Gilbert had been previously engaged in the same business, and at the same place, upon his own account; and although he was now merely an assistant, the jars containing the drugs were marked with his name, to give them a higher marketable value. The extract of belladonna contained in the jar that passed through the hands of Aspinwall to those of Foord, the dispensing apothecary, had not been prepared by the defendant, but was one of those that he had purchased from another dealer. It was proved that the labels used upon the vessels were the property of Winchester, the defendant, although they bore the name of Gilbert. The judge stated the law as follows:

“The case depends upon the first point taken by the defendant on his motion for a non-suit, and the question is whether the defendant, being a remote vendor of the medicine, and there being no privity or connection between him and the plaintiff, the action can be maintained.

“If, in labelling a poisonous drug with the name of a harmless medicine, for public market, no duty was violated by the defendant, excepting that which he owed to Aspinwall, his immediate vendee, in virtue of his contract of sale, this action cannot be maintained. If A build a wagon and sell it to B, who sells it to C, and C hires it to D, who, in consequence of the gross negligence of A in building the wagon, is overturned and injured, D cannot recover damages against A, the builder. A’s obligation to build the wagon faithfully arises solely out of his contract with B. The public have nothing to do with it. Misfortunes to third persons, not parties to the contract, would not be a natural and necessary consequence of the builder's negligence; and such negligence is not an act immediately dangerous to human life.

"So, for the same reason, if a horse be defectively shod by a smith, and a person hiring the horse from the owner is thrown and injured in consequence of the smith's negligence in shoeing, the smith is not liable for the injury. The smith's duty in such case grows exclusively out of his contract with the owner of the horse; it was a duty which the smith owed to him alone, and to no one else. And although the injury to the rider may have happened in consequence of the negligence of the smith, the latter was not bound, either by his contract or by any consideration of public policy or safety, to respond for his breach of duty to any one except the person he contracted with.

"But the case in hand stands on a different ground. The defendant was a dealer in poisonous drugs. Gilbert was his agent in preparing them for the market. The death, or great bodily harm, of some person was the natural and almost inevitable consequence of the sale of belladonna by means of the false label.

"Gilbert, the defendant's agent, would have been punishable for manslaughter if Mrs. Thomas had died in consequence of taking the falsely labelled medicine. Every man who, by his culpable negligence, causes the death of another, although without intent to kill, is guilty of manslaughter. A chemist who negligently sells laudanum in a phial labelled as paregoric, and thereby causes the death of a person to whom it is administered, is guilty of manslaughter. So highly does the law value human life, that it admits of no justification whereon life has been lost, and the carelessness or negligence of one person has contributed to the death of another. And this rule applies not only where the death of one is occasioned by the negligent act of another, but where it is caused by the negligent omission of a duty of that other. Although the defendant Winchester may not be answerable criminally for the negligence of his agent, there can be no doubt of his liability in a civil action, in which the act of the agent is to be regarded as the act of the principal. * * * * *

"In the present case, the sale of the poisonous article was made to a dealer in drugs, and not to a consumer. The injury, therefore, was not likely to fall on him or on his vendee, who was also a dealer, but much more likely to be visited on a remote purchaser, as actually happened. The defendant's negligence put human life in imminent danger. Can it be said that there was no duty on the part of the defendant to avoid the creation of that danger by the exercise of greater caution? Or that the exercise of that caution was a duty only to his immediate vendee, whose life was not endangered? The defendant's duty arose out of the nature of his business, and the danger to others incident to its mismanagement.

“Nothing but mischief like that which actually happened could have been expected from sending the poison falsely labelled into the market; and the defendant is justly responsible for the probable consequences of the act. The duty of exercising caution in this respect did not arise out of the defendant’s contract of sale to Aspinwall. The wrong done by the defendant was in putting the poison, mislabelled, into the hands of Aspinwall, as an article of merchandise, to be sold and afterwards used as the extract of dandelion by some person then unknown. The owner of a horse and cart, who leaves them unattended in the street, is liable for any damage which may result from his negligence. The owner of a loaded gun, who puts it into the hands of a child, by whose indiscretion it is discharged, is liable for the damage occasioned by the discharge. The defendant’s contract of sale to Aspinwall does not excuse the wrong done to the plaintiff. It was a part of the means by which the wrong was effected. The plaintiff’s injury and their remedy would have stood on the same principle if the defendant had given the belladonna to Dr. Foord without price, or if he had put it in his shop without his knowledge, under circumstances which would have led to its sale on the faith of the label.

“In Longmeid v. Holliday, the distinction is recognized between an act of negligence imminently dangerous to the lives of others, and one that is not so. In the former case, the party guilty of negligence is liable to the party injured, whether there be a contract between them or not; in the latter, the negligent party is only liable to the party with whom he contracted, and on the ground that negligence is a breach of the contract.

“The defendant, on the trial, insisted that Aspinwall and Foord were guilty of negligence in selling the article in question for what it was represented to be in the label, and that the suit, if it could be sustained at all, should have been brought against Foord. The Judge charged the jury that if they, or either of them, were guilty of negligence in selling the belladonna for dandelion, the verdict must be for the defendant; and left the question of their negligence to the jury, who found on that point for the plaintiff. If the case really depended on the point thus raised, the question was properly left to the jury. But I think it did not. The defendant, by affixing the label to the jar, represented its contents to be dandelion, and to have been prepared by his agent Gilbert. The word prepared on the label must be understood to mean that the article was manufactured by him, or that it had passed through some process under his hands, which would give him personal knowledge of its true name and quality.

Whether Foord was justified in selling the article upon the faith of the defendant's label, would have been an open question in an action by the plaintiffs against him, and I wish to be understood as giving no opinion upon that point. But it seems to me to be clear that the defendant cannot, in this case, set up as a defence that Foord sold the contents of the jar as and for what the defendant represented it to be. The label conveyed the idea distinctly to Foord that the contents of the jar was the extract of dandelion, and that the defendant knew it to be such. So far as the defendant is concerned, Foord was under no obligation to test the truth of the representation. The charge of the judge, in submitting to the jury the question in relation to the negligence of Foord and Aspinwall, cannot be complained of by the defendant."

To this clear exposition of the law, it is not necessary that we should add anything further upon the points considered. As the judge stated, the sending forth into the world of a poisonous drug, bearing the label of one that is comparatively harmless, is setting in motion an agent for evil that will hold the author answerable, no matter whether the act be done through malice or negligence, or through how many hands the article passes before the injury result.

It only remains for us, in connection with this branch of the subject, to consider the rights of the patient, apothecary, and physician, in prescriptions. In former times, medical practitioners generally carried their medicine chests with them, and dispensed drugs themselves. But at the present day, the apothecary is the storehouse keeper, upon whom the physician draws for his supplies. This arrangement is beneficial to both professions, as well as to the public, and from it arise certain implied contracts.

When a physician sends a prescription to an apothecary to be compounded, there exists between them a tacit understanding or agreement that such prescription, when it is original with the practitioner sending it, shall not be made public. In such case, it would be neither honorable nor honest for the druggist to deprive the author of the benefit of it by dispensing it indiscriminately. The knowledge that the medicine composed of the ingredients named in the physician's order is one that is beneficial to certain complaints, may have been obtained only after long study and patient research, and it would certainly be wrong for another person to take away the reward of such labors by throwing the remedy broadcast before the public. The originator undoubtedly has the right to do so if he choose to exercise it. But the apothecary certainly does not obtain the same privilege by gaining the knowledge of the ingredients and proportions which he acquires in compounding the prescription.

The patient certainly has the right to use the order that he has purchased from his medical adviser as often as he chooses. But after the circumstances under which it was first given to him have changed, unless he obtained fresh advice, he employs the medicines named at his own risk, with regard to the consequences produced by them. And he would probably have no right to publish such prescription if it were original with his physician. The same may also be said of the druggist who compounds it for him. Professor Ordronaux, of "Columbia College Law School," has written what we believe is the only work extant that considers these points with any degree of minuteness; and to his valuable treatise we would refer those desirous of obtaining a comprehensive knowledge of the legal relations bearing upon all the various branches of the medical profession.* Upon this subject he says: "But although, as has been already shown, the party paying for the prescription has an undoubted property in the paper, and a right to the personal use of the formula, it is clear that he acquires thereby no absolute property in the latter. That he may use it as often as he pleases, cannot be doubted, for the use is precisely what he has purchased and paid for. * * *

"Nor, again, does it follow from the right to use this latter"—the prescription—"that he can do it in any essentially different way, as by printing or publishing it, for example, any more than he could private letters, without first obtaining permission of the author, if a letter, and by parity of reason of the physician, if a prescription."

The prescription, then, continues the property of the author, although the druggist has a copy of it in his possession. The latter has the equitable right to use it only subject to the order of the physician. But this is true only of those that are original, and does not apply to the multitude of medical recipes found in the various pharmacopœias or dispensaries. For the physician has no greater property in the latter than has the apothecary, who can compound them as often as he chooses, and does not thereby subject himself to liability for depriving another of the fruit of his industry.

CHAPTER III.

THE APOTHECARY AS A PRACTITIONER.

WHEN the apothecary engages professionally in the practice of medicine, as a matter of course, he takes upon himself new responsibilities, and stands upon very much the same legal footing with the members of the profession. There are some regular physicians who unite the sale of drugs and chemicals with their practice, but in this connection we only wish to speak of those who, being simply druggists and apothecaries, undertake the healing of the sick.

The statutes of several of the States require that only those who are regularly licensed shall engage in practice. Where such laws exist, one not being thus qualified can recover nothing for his services, however valuable they may have been. But in the absence of such requirement, we know of nothing that will prevent a patient from employing whomsoever he chooses to attend him, and from being liable to remunerate him, in case any service be rendered.

The liability of an individual for malfeasance in "the healing art," will depend very much upon the extent of the qualifications he has induced the public to believe he possesses. The regular physician who undertakes the cure of a person, and by his want of the ordinary skill belonging properly to the profession, causes injury, is certainly liable to the patient. But if a person known to be entirely inexperienced, and who makes no pretensions to fitness and capacity as a medical practitioner, be employed, he cannot ordinarily be held answerable for damages resulting from wrong treatment. Says Mr. Story, in his treatise on contracts: "If a person known not to be a physician or surgeon, and to have no peculiar knowledge or skill in the treatment of disease, be called in and afford gratuitous assistance to the best of his ability, he is not liable if he administer improper remedies." But the druggist is generally neither entirely conversant with—nor utterly ignorant upon—medical matters, and would stand between the two, in respect to his liability. He could hardly be expected to possess the experience and information of regularly educated physicians; and still, from the nature of his employment, the public would naturally look for a higher degree of skill than they could expect to find in one entirely unconnected with the healing art.

If a person suffering from some complaint, should state his ailment to one whom he knew to be entirely unskilled in medicine, and that person should recommend certain remedies for him, no action would lie against the person thus prescribing for any evil effects resulting from their use, in the absence of malice. The patient would have no reason to place confidence in the suggestions of an unskilled volunteer. But the case would be different, if he should enter a drug store, and stating the nature of his disease, should ask the apothecary to prepare him some medicine which would be suitable to his complaint. If the dealer, in accordance with his request, proceed to compound a dose which, from its entire unfitness for the case as stated, after being taken, work injury, he would probably be liable to an action. The patient was justified in placing some confidence in the druggist, although probably not as much as he might in a professional physician. And the want of skill in prescribing, that would render the regular practitioner liable, in many cases would not be sufficiently gross to make an apothecary answerable, unless he had expressly contracted for the use of the ordinary qualities of the former. The dealer in drugs is not compelled to take upon himself the responsibility of deciding what remedies will be suitable in any particular case. And if, instead of doing so, he merely state the fact that such and such medicines are often used for complaints like that named by the patient, and the latter then order such remedies prepared, the apothecary will place himself under no liability by furnishing them.

When injury results from an attempt by a druggist to treat a patient's disease, he cannot defend himself by claiming that he acted without consideration or reward, and therefore cannot be held answerable. For, when a person undertakes a work, although he is to receive no compensation, he is liable for gross negligence in its performance. And, in fact, the apothecary does receive compensation in the profit he makes or is supposed to make on the drugs used in the preparation of the medicine he sells.

The varying circumstances of the different cases will make a great difference in the liability imposed. If a person living in a place where there was no regular physician, or who was unable to obtain one, should apply to a druggist to assist him, and the latter use his best skill and all his knowledge in so doing, he would not be liable, generally, for injury following his inexperience. For the employer was not induced to choose him in preference to those of known abilities, by his representations that he was possessed of the ordinary requirements, but was led, in so doing, by his own necessities. An apothecary may, however, by pretending to be competent and making such a show as to induce the public to believe that he is so, place himself under as strict a legal responsibility for neglect or malpractice, as a regular medical attendant. It would not be just that the mere fact that a person had been licensed, should render him liable to a greater extent than another who made equal pretensions to skill, but had no diploma to show. It is not always possible for the public to know at once, whether a person holding himself out as a regular practitioner, has pursued the usual course of study or not, what is required, then, from the physician in the pursuit of his calling, is the exercise of ordinary carefulness, skill, and diligence; and the apothecary who professes to stand in his place, must possess and use the same qualifications. For anything short, the law will hold him answerable. Having undertaken the care of a patient, he must not only possess ordinary skill, but must use it in favor of that patient, and if, by his inattention, the disease is allowed to overcome him, he will be liable.

If, for example, an apothecary should attempt to set a broken leg, and through his incapacity to perform such an operation, or his want of attention afterwards, the joinder be crooked and imperfect, an action will lie against him for the injury. No medical attendant, of course, is expected to cure every case that comes to him, and if, notwithstanding the use of ordinary care and attention the patient die, he is not in default, where damages are recoverable, their amount will vary with the circumstances of the different cases. The sufferer is not always confined to remuneration for actual loss and pain, but may sometimes also recover what the law calls "vindictive damages." But where the defendant has proved that he has exercised the necessary qualifications in any degree, such verdicts should not be encouraged. The healing art is most beneficial to the public, and it is impossible that even the most skilful and experienced men can always understand the nature and proper treatment of a disease.

When malpractice is the cause of the death of a patient, the person guilty thereof may sometimes incur the penalties of murder or manslaughter. The law upon this point may be considered as laid down in the following words used by Judge Scott in a charge to a jury: "If a person assume to act as a physician, however ignorant of medical science, and prescribe with an honest intention of curing the patient, but, through ignorance of the quality of the medicine prescribed, or of the nature of the disease, or both, the patient die in consequence of the treatment, contrary to the expectation of the party prescribing, he is not guilty of murder or manslaughter. But if the party prescribing have so much knowledge of the fatal tendency of the prescription that it may be reasonably presumed that he administered the medicine from an obstinate and wilful rashness, and not with an honest intention and expectation of effecting a cure, he is guilty of manslaughter at least, though he might not have intended any bodily harm to the patient."

In early times, it was held that a distinction existed between the respective liabilities of the licensed and the unlicensed practitioner. Upon this subject, Blackstone says: "If a physician give his patient a potion or plaister to cure him, which, contrary to expectation, kills him, this is neither murder nor manslaughter, but misadventure, and he shall not be punished criminally, however liable he might formerly have been to a civil action for neglect or ignorance; but it hath been holden that if it be not a regular physician or surgeon who administers the medicine, or performs the operation, it is manslaughter at the least; yet Sir Matthew Hale very justly questions the law of this determination."

From what we have said, then, it will be understood that persons practising medicine will be held liable criminally only when their negligence or want of skill has been so gross that from it the law will imply an intention to do injury. But the civil liability will attach whenever a reasonable amount of expertness and care is not employed.

CHAPTER IV.

PATENT MEDICINES.

THE manufacture and sale of the various preparations and compounds commonly known as "patent medicines," has, within a few years past, become quite an important branch of business in this country. Although lacking the prestige that medicines prepared for specific cases by competent parties possess, the availability of these articles, combined with cheapness, and in some cases real merit, have made them quite popular, and some of them are found upon the shelves of many of our drug stores, and have a place in multitudes of our family medicine closets. As to the wisdom of the popular favor which has brought into existence so many of these patent remedies, we do not propose to speak. It would be wrong to unreservedly condemn a class, in some of the species of which so much real merit lies; and it would also be wrong to blindly recommend a system which may be productive of harm. That the too common and indiscriminate use of these general remedies may become a prolific source of evil, cannot be for a moment doubted.

An experienced and competent physician, after a careful examination of the condition and circumstances of his patient, may often beneficially employ powerful drugs. But when those drugs are put into the hands of those who have but little knowledge of their own condition, to be used as their imagination and unaided judgment dictate, it certainly is not strange that injury results. Patent medicines are often purchased to avoid the expense attending the employment of professional skill and knowledge, and are used with a considerable amount of blind faith and confidence. Remembering this, it will be easy to prescribe the bounds within which the business can safely be conducted. As long as these patent remedies can be so compounded as to possess the power to benefit those who are affected by disease, without having also the capacity to do injury when used without a great amount of judgment and caution, their production will be an advantage to the public, and no longer. We believe that this fact has been recognized and acted upon by those who have originated the most successful of the remedies that have been placed before the public. Many of the ingredients they have brought into requisition, when properly prepared, are most efficacious in subduing disease, and, under ordinary circumstances, have no tendency to injure. But the profit connected with the business will induce some to engage in it who are lacking in conscientiousness, and will carelessly employ dangerous agents.

It is not, however, our intention to discuss the merits of these preparations, but to consider some of the principles of law applying to their manufacture and sale. And, as these are in many respects analogous to those relating to the sale of drugs in general, we shall only devote a short space to their consideration.

A distinction between the contracts of sale of ordinary drugs and of patent medicines, lies in the fact that in the case of the former, the consumer who purchases from the apothecary, relies upon his skill, while the buyer of the latter, although he purchase from the same apothecary, places his reliance upon the knowledge and judgment of the manufacturer. As said before, the mixing of various drugs already manufactured, or the selection and preservation of uncompounded drugs, requires a considerable degree of skill on the part of the druggist; but when he merely acts as the vendor of another's preparations, sealed and stamped with the maker's mark, we think his position is different. As the dealer, in the latter case, makes no pretence that he has examined, and no offer to warrant the articles sold, it would seem that he should not be held under as strict a liability as when he disposes of drugs and chemicals.

The manufacturer, however, is held to a strict responsibility for injuries resulting from the proper use of his preparations. He has invited the public, by means of advertisements, etc., to invest in his medicines, and if they do so, and are damaged in health after having used them as directed, we know of no rule of law that will release the maker from responsibility. It is customary to place labels upon the vessels containing medicinal preparations, stating how they are to be used, what complaints they are intended to affect, etc. The object of these labels is as often to induce persons to purchase, as to tell them how to use the compounds after they have been purchased. They would, in general, add nothing to the warranty implied in the sale of drugs. The labels on many patent medicines would signify that they are a "cure for all the ills to which the flesh is heir;" but they would probably be construed as belonging to the same class as what a learned judge called "the babble of the auction room," and would carry no warranty to the purchaser. There is nothing, however, to prevent the manufacturer from warranting his wares to cure any specified disease; and when he does so, by using such language as the vendee would be justified in relying upon, he will be liable for any breach of his engagement. While it would be folly upon the part of a person to accept as truth any statement that a certain medicine was a cure for every complaint, still, such language may be used, or assertions made, as any prudent and intelligent man would have a right to believe and trust in; and in such cases the law will often imply a warranty.

If directions for use accompany the medicines, the maker is not ordinarily liable, unless they are followed, and damage then result. He has the right to, and should, for his own protection, direct the manner in which the articles he manufactures shall be employed; and when those directions, plainly written or printed, are not followed, there is no reason why he should be held answerable. A person who swallows a whole box of pills, or bottle of extracts, at one dose, when the label tells him to take a much smaller quantity, has only himself to blame for consequential harm. For all injury, however, resulting from such use of patent medicines as the directions authorize, the manufacturer will be held responsible. Professing to benefit mankind, he must not lay snares in their way, and make profit by the sale of articles that have a direct tendency to injure. He should, therefore, be extremely careful as to the compounding of his preparations, and as to the language he employs in labelling them, remembering that although the use of words professing that they will cure and heal all diseases, wounds, and ailments, may perhaps increase the sale of his commodities, it will also, in many cases, add to his liability.

If, by mistake, an injurious or poisonous substance should be mingled with the ingredients of a patent medicine, and harm should follow, there can be no doubt as to the liability of the manufacturer, and in some cases he might be found guilty of manslaughter. But when we consider the questions that arise as to the responsibility of the retail dealer who merely sells these preparations, without any examination, we find much more difficulty involved. It can hardly be claimed that the apothecary stands upon the same footing, when he sells these articles, that he does in using drugs in the compounding of prescriptions. In the latter case, the medicine when completed is the work of his own proper skill, and he is bound to know that the ingredients he employs are suitable and proper. He has an opportunity, by the aid of his knowledge of drugs, to examine all he uses, and should do so, if he would be safe. Here, as we have seen, he would be liable for mistakes, even though they resulted from the improper labelling by the manufacturer of the articles employed.

But when a purchaser asks for some preparation put up by a maker of patent medicines, securely sealed, and which, therefore, the druggist has had no opportunity to examine, he trusts to that manufacturer, and cannot in ordinary cases, we think, hold the druggist liable for injury, when a mistake has been made in the composition of the article. If he were responsible, it must be on the ground of negligence. But such negligence could only consist in his not examining particularly the articles sold, and to hold that the retail dealer is obliged to do that, would be in effect to drive these preparations entirely out of the market. For, such an examination is, in many cases, impossible. Patent medicines are usually put up in packages that are securely sealed, corked or fastened, and the opening of them would often destroy or injure them, through the agency of evaporation, etc. The law only requires from men engaged in any branch of business, ordinary care in the pursuit of that business; and we think that ordinary care in the sale of patent medicines would fall far short of the examination of every pill in a box, or every bottle in a package. It might happen that the hurtful matter lay only in one very small portion of the article sold, where it would require the most minute and careful search to discover it.

Perhaps it might be said by some, that the simple sale of a substance containing hurtful properties was an unlawful act, rendering the vendor liable for the effects thereof. But the sale itself would not be the cause of the injury to the consumer, but merely one in the chain of circumstances, through the medium of which the hurtful substance was enabled to act, and might be in its nature, perfectly lawful. A man who throws poisons into a stream, the water of which is used by others below, is liable for resulting injury, for his wrongful proceeding is the direct cause of that injury. But the selling of the articles we are considering would be of a different character, and carry with it different obligations.

There might be those again who would claim that the implied warranty which attends the sale of drugs generally would also follow the sale of patent medicines by an apothecary. But we do not think that this warranty can be implied where the acts of the parties themselves directly tend to deny its existence. The purchaser asks for the preparation of another than the druggist, without expecting that anything shall be done to it by the latter, who, in his turn, sells it without making any profession of knowledge as to its contents. Let us suppose that a grocer, who grinds and prepares spices, also keeps on hand and for sale those put up by some other person; a customer asks specifically for a box of spice prepared by the other manufacturer, in which, by mistake, some hurtful substance has found its way. We do not think that the doctrine of implied warranty will hold here, for the purchaser chooses to take the wares of another, with their good and bad qualities, rather than those of the vendor's own manufacture.

It is probably true that in one way benefit to the public might arise from holding the retail dealer liable for damage, in all cases where it results from the use of improper compounds. If they were thus responsible, they would probably refuse to deal in the articles until positively assured that they were of such a nature that no evil could result to the consumer; when the compounder, in his turn, would be compelled to omit, in their manufacture, any substance that could possibly harm. But in the absence of binding decisions, we think that the purchaser, having bought upon the credit of the manufacturer, and having a remedy against him, would be obliged to resort to him, and could not ordinarily look to the druggist. Where positive poisons were included among the ingredients of any such substance, the case might be different, but it would be difficult to draw the line of distinction.

However, as the law cannot be considered as fully settled upon these points, and as it would probably not look with favor upon measures calculated to give unbounded license to the introduction of these ready-made remedies, the safest policy for the apothecary will be to exercise extreme caution in receiving and selling them. And if he should, for the purpose of making a sale, recommend such an article, his liability might become similar to that of the person who for reward undertakes to prescribe for another.

It is certain that the druggist, when he sells, must furnish the specific article asked for by the purchaser. If the latter, by way of example, should request a bottle of "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," and the vendor should sell him another preparation, by the use of which damage result to his health, the apothecary could not legally defend himself by proving that the article was put up and marked like Ayer's preparations, and that he had bought it believing it to be such. He has the means, in most cases, of knowing whose medicines he deals in, and must take care that he sells none other than the article asked for.

The difficulty of proving that injury has certainly resulted from the use of these specific remedies, together with the fact that many of them are harmless, will probably prevent the arising of many instances in which the liability of the retail vendor will be tested. But the discussion is at least an interesting one, and the principles relating to it will probably eventually be fully settled. Information upon the requirements of the revenue laws as to stamps, and the penalty for dealing in these preparations without them, is given elsewhere.

It is hoped that the array of liabilities presented will not serve to discourage any of the members of the pharmaceutical profession. In ancient days, the minds of a superstitious people were wont to associate with the apothecary's art, much of the mystery that hung around the "Witch's Cauldron" of Shakspeare's imagination :

"Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing—
For a charm of double trouble,
Like a hell broth boil and bubble."

And although the practical eye of the law pierces this veil, and views the business of the dealer in drugs as simply one of the practical avocations of life, it has not taken away the high degree of respect ever bestowed upon those engaged therein, who do their duty well.

CHAPTER V.

CONTRACTS OF SALE, IN GENERAL.

HAVING considered, at sufficient length, the peculiar liabilities of the members of the pharmaceutical profession, as dealers and compounders of drugs, if light has been shed upon the subject, the end in view in commencing this little treatise has been attained. But custom has associated or combined with the dealing in drugs, the manufacture or sale of certain articles, such as perfumeries, surgical instruments and appliances, corks, glass, glue, varnish, alcohol, etc., etc.; and it may be well to consider, very briefly, a few of the points that frequently arise in the course of the various contracts concerning them—and the principles that govern all these contracts, are the plain and well understood rules of the common law.

The vending of soda water is probably more nearly allied—in the nature of the liabilities it imposes—to the drug business, than that of any of the articles named above. As it is made and sold to be at once consumed, and when improperly prepared may have a very injurious effect upon health and the human system, the implied engagement that it is of good and proper quality always goes with it. The seller will stand upon the same legal ground, with the vendor of wines and provisions. The dealer must be careful that it contains no substances which can cause injury to him who partakes of it. There have been too many instances in which damage and even death has resulted from mistakes in the use of the various ingredients, or flavoring extracts; and what has been already written as to the carelessness that will render a person guilty of manslaughter, in the eyes of the law, and as to that which will make him liable for resulting injury, has its full bearing upon the vendor of soda water. As the purchaser is compelled to trust to the skill of the dealer in selecting, and to his care in combining the various component parts, the latter must possess these qualities to an extent sufficient, at least, to guard against injury.

The statement of all the legal principles relating to the contracts for the sale and purchase of the articles before-mentioned as bearing some relation to the business of the druggist, cannot, of course, be attempted here. And we shall merely consider briefly a few of the questions that most frequently arise in the course of these dealings.

Apothecaries are generally forbidden, by the laws of the various States, to sell for use as a beverage any wines, alcohol, or spirituous liquors; but are exempted from the ordinary requirement as to license, etc., for those they keep for medicinal purposes. All dealers in drugs, who keep alcohol or spirits of any kind in stock, are obliged to expose a sign stating that fact; so, at least, a recent decision would seem to imply.

As to warranty of the title of an article sold, we would call attention to the following statement of the law. A person selling an article in his possession impliedly warrants that it is his own, and will be answerable to the purchaser, if the title proves to be in another, whether the seller knew that he was lacking in his right, or not. But if the article sold is not in the possession of the vendor, and he does not assume directly to have the title, then the purchaser must not look to him in case he be unable to obtain the article, or be deprived of it through defect of title. In such cases, he buys at his own risk. The vendor, may, however, use words of warranty which will render him liable, even though the chattel be not at the time in his possession.

With reference to quality; if there be no express warranty, the law usually implies none. We have already incidentally mentioned two exceptions to this rule; one in the case of the sale of provisions, and the other where the purchaser has no means of judging as to the quality of the article bought. In contracts of this kind, the law will presume a warranty that the goods sold are what the buyer might naturally suppose them to be. We have considered the application of this rule to the sales of drugs and medicines, and need pursue it no further. But there is another exception, which is this: Where the vendor has used fraud, even though there be no express warranty, the law will imply one, no device must be resorted to for the purpose of concealing defects that the purchaser might otherwise discover. Professor Parsons lays down the law upon this point as follows:

“If a seller knows of a defect in his goods which the buyer does not know, and if he had known would not have bought the goods, and the seller is silent and only silent, his silence is nevertheless a moral fraud, and ought perhaps on moral grounds to avoid the transaction. But this moral fraud has not yet grown into a legal fraud. In cases of this kind, there may be circumstances which cause this moral fraud to be a legal fraud, and give the buyer his action on the implied warranty, or on the deceit. If the seller be not silent, but produce the sale by means of false representations, then the rule of caveat emptor does not apply, and the seller is answerable for his fraud. But the weight of authority requires that this should be active fraud. The common law does not oblige the seller to disclose all that he knows which lessens the value of the property he would sell. He may be silent, leaving the purchaser to inquire and examine for himself, or to require a warranty. He may be silent, and be safe; but if he be more than silent; if by acts and certainly if by words, he leads the buyer astray, inducing him to suppose that he buys with warranty, or otherwise preventing an examination or inquiry, this becomes a fraud of which the law will take cognizance. The distinction seems to be—and it is grounded upon the apparent necessity of leaving men to take some care of themselves in their business transactions—the seller may let the buyer cheat himself ad libitum, but must not actively assist him in cheating himself.”

If a lot of toilet bottles, for example, be open to the examination of the buyer, so that he has the means of judging as to their condition, and the seller make no warranty, he will not be answerable for any defect. But if the vendor, in such case, had covered with paint, or in some other way, cracks in the bottles, which tended to materially lessen the value of the articles, he would be liable to the purchaser. For he has taken away from the latter the opportunity for judging as to the value of the thing bought, and is therefore considered as warranting that it is what the buyer might reasonably believe it to be.

If a chattel be sold “with all faults,” the vendor is not liable even for latent defects, unless he uses the fraud of which we have just spoken, to conceal them. Language of the vendor amounting simply to praise or commendation of his wares, will not generally be construed as a warranty. But if he makes any distinct affirmation of quality, upon which the buyer may justly and reasonably rely, so that such affirmation be instrumental in causing the sale, it will be regarded as a warranty. What particular word or words be used is not important. It is the intention on the part of the vendor, as understood and relied upon by the vendee, that constitutes the liability of the former.

Where a note or bill of sale is given, there is, in general, an implied warranty that the articles sold agree with their description in such bill or note. So where goods are sold by sample, the bulk must correspond with the sample in nature and quality. The buyer has the opportunity to examine only the part that is offered as a specimen, and the seller is therefore supposed to warrant that the balance of the articles sold, are possessed of like qualities. If an express warranty has been given, the fact that the purchaser examined the substance sold, or a sample thereof, will not release the vendor from liability on such warranty. It is an additional security, which the man purchasing has been careful enough to obtain, and the law will not deprive him of its benefit.

Where a person undertakes to furnish a thing which shall answer a specific purpose, there is an implied engagement that the article when completed shall do so. If, for example, a manufacturer of surgical instruments should contract to produce an appliance "that shall hold broken limbs in position," he would be liable to an action for a breach of warranty, in case the article furnished fail to answer that purpose. But if, in such case, the surgeon who orders it, takes upon himself the responsibility of directing in what manner the thing shall be made, or if he order a specific article, then the manufacturer is only required to furnish the appliance directed, even though it do not answer the purpose for which the buyer intended it. In the language of Chief Justice Tindal: "It appears to be a distinction well founded both in reason and authority, that if a party purchases an article upon his own judgment, he cannot afterwards hold the vendor responsible on the ground that the article turns out to be unfit for the purpose for which it was required. But if he relies upon the judgment of the seller, and informs him of the use to which the article is to be applied, it seems to me the transaction carries with it an implied warranty that the thing furnished shall be fit and proper for the purposes for which it was designed."

When the warranty—either express or implied—has been broken, the vendee has generally a choice of remedies. He may return the goods, and defend an action for the price, or sue for it, if it has been already paid. But he should do this at once, and retaining the articles, after a discovery of their inferiority, would be regarded as a confirmation of the sale. If the seller refuse to receive the goods back, the vendee may sell them, and recover from him the difference between what he receives on the sale, and the price originally paid. He should endeavor, however, to obtain the reasonable worth of the goods. If he do not choose to return the goods, and rescind the sale, he may bring his action on the warranty. In this case the value of the articles not returned would be considered in estimating damages.

CHAPTER VI.

INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS.

APOTHECARIES are required, by the provisions of the internal revenue laws, to pay an annual special tax of ten dollars, in case their yearly gross receipts amount to over one thousand dollars. If their annual sales exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, they are required to pay, in addition to that special tax, one dollar for every thousand in excess of that amount.

The act of Congress imposing the tax, thus determines who shall be considered as coming under its provisions: "Every person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to prescriptions of physicians, or where medicines are sold, shall be regarded as an apothecary. But wholesale and retail dealers who have paid the special tax therefor shall not be required to pay a tax as apothecaries." Then follows a clause which provides that druggists who have paid the special tax as such, shall not be required to pay as retail liquor dealers, in consequence of selling alcohol, or "dispensing, upon the prescriptions of physicians, the wines and spirits officinal in the United States and other national pharmacopœias, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either, at any one time, nor exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of three hundred dollars per annum."

Physicians, surgeons, and dentists are required, although two or more be in partnership, to individually pay a special tax; but the payment of one such tax is sufficient for any number of members of a firm of druggists. But if the firm be changed by the taking in of new partners, or in other manner, during the year, a new special tax must be paid. The law allows a change of the place of business, without a new assessment, in case the particulars of the change be registered with the assistant assessor and collector of such new place of business. The legal representatives, or the executors or administrators of a person deceased, who before his death paid the special tax, may carry on the business without payment of anything additional.

Wholesale dealers whose annual sales do not exceed fifty thousand dollars, are required to pay a yearly tax of fifty dollars. In case their annual sales exceed that amount, the law requires the payment of one dollar for every thousand dollars of the excess, in addition. Under this head will fall "every person who shall, for himself, or on commission, sell, or offer to sell, any goods, wares, or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, not including wines, spirits, or malt liquors, whose annual sales exceed twenty-five thousand dollars." Wholesale dealers are also allowed to do business as apothecaries at the same place, without being required to pay any additional special tax.

Retail dealers are those doing business the same as the foregoing, whose annual sales exceed one thousand dollars, but do not exceed twenty-five thousand. Their special tax amounts to ten dollars, and its payment also allows them to do business as apothecaries at the same place.

Wholesale dealers in liquors, whose annual sales do not exceed fifty thousand dollars, are required to pay one hundred dollars. If the sales exceed that amount, they must pay one dollar for every thousand over fifty, in addition. Every person who sells or offers for sale any distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines of any kind, whose annual sales, including sales of other merchandise, shall exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer in liquors.

Retail liquor dealers are to pay a special tax of twenty-five dollars. Every person who sells or offers for sale foreign or domestic spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors, and whose annual sales, including all sales of other merchandise, do not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, is considered as a retail dealer in liquors.

As the payment of the apothecary's tax allows the person so paying to dispose only of such wines, liquors and spirits, as are compounded or mixed in medicines and prescriptions, it is customary for drug dealers to pay, instead, the tax imposed upon wholesale or retail liquor dealers. When they do so, they are exempted from payment of any tax as apothecaries, as the greater includes the less. A decision by Commissioner Delano, referred to before, requires all dealers engaged in any way in the sale of liquors and spirits, to expose to view a sign stating that fact.

While, as we shall see, the distillation of spirits or alcoholic liquors is placed under severe restrictions, and a heavy tax, the law provides that "no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists, for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical, chemical, or scientific purposes, which has been used in those processes."

The act approved on the thirteenth of March, 1868, materially altered and simplified the internal revenue system. That act repealed the ad valorem and specific taxes on all manufactures, except that upon coal, gas, the various products of petroleum and bituminous substances, tobacco in its various forms, distilled spirits, and fermented liquors. To supply the place of those repealed, a tax was imposed upon sales by manufacturers, as follows: "Every person, firm, or corporation who shall manufacture, by hand or machinery, any goods, wares or merchandise (breadstuffs and unmanufactured lumber excepted) not otherwise specifically taxed, and whose annual sales exceed five thousand dollars, shall pay for every additional thousand dollars in excess of five thousand dollars, two dollars. The amount of sales in excess of the rate of five thousand dollars per annum, shall be returned quarter-yearly to the assistant assessor, and the tax on the excess of five thousand dollars shall be assessed by the assessor, and paid quarter-yearly, in the months of January, April, July, and October of each year, as other taxes are assessed and paid; and the first assessment herein provided for shall be made in the month of July, 1868, for the three months then next preceding.

Manufacturers whose annual products exceed the sum of one thousand dollars, are also subject to a special tax of ten dollars. Under the caption of manufacturers, the law includes all those who, by hand or machinery, make any goods, wares, or merchandise, or "who are engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale of any articles or compounds, or shall put up for sale in packages, with their own name and trade mark thereon, any article or compound."

Persons manufacturing above one thousand dollars' worth in two or more places, must pay a special tax on each. If a manufacturer, who is engaged the entire year in the production of taxable articles, owing to the nature of those articles, or other causes, does not make his sales monthly, he is still entitled to the exemption of one thousand dollars per annum, if his sales during the entire year do not exceed three thousand dollars. Manufacturers are also allowed, without additional tax, to sell their goods at the place where they are made, or at the principal office, provided only samples are kept at such office.

STAMP DUTIES.

By the provisions of the revenue laws, the tax on certain articles may be paid by placing stamps upon them, which stamps are to be cancelled or destroyed, after being once used. The following are the requirements concerning the stamping of articles usually found upon the shelves of the druggist, and will give him, with what has gone before, a knowledge of the bearing that the Internal Revenue Acts have upon his business.

Upon "every packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other enclosure, containing any pills, powders, tinctures, troches, lozenges, sirups, cordials, bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniments, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters, essences, spirits, oils, or other medicinal preparations or compositions whatsoever, made and sold, or removed for consumption and sale, by any person or persons whatever, wherein the person making or preparing the same has, or claims to have, any private formula or occult secret or art for the making or preparing the same, or has or claims to have any exclusive right or title to the making or preparing the same, or which are prepared, uttered, vended, or exposed for sale under any letters patent, or held out or recommended to the public by the makers, vendors, or proprietors thereof, as proprietary medicines, or as remedies or specifics for any disease, diseases, or affections whatever, affecting the human or animal body," is required the payment of tax as follows:

When the retail price or value of such vessel and contents shall not exceed the sum of twenty-five cents—one cent.

When the retail price or value of such vessel and contents shall exceed twenty-five cents, and shall not exceed fifty cents—two cents.

When the retail price or value of such vessel and contents shall exceed fifty cents, and not exceed seventy-five—three cents. When the retail price of such article shall exceed seventy-five, and shall not exceed one dollar—four cents. Where the retail price or value exceeds one dollar, for each and every fifty cents or fractional part thereof, over the sum of one dollar—an additional two cents.

All perfumeries and cosmetics, put up in similar shape, are subject to the same ad volorem tax as the medical preparations noticed above.

Proprietors of these articles (medicinal preparations, perfumeries, and cosmetics) are allowed to furnish and use private dies, without expense to the United States. When the proprietary stamps are so affixed to the vessel or package that in opening the same the stamp must be unavoidably destroyed, it is not necessary to cancel them; otherwise they should be cancelled by writing or printing upon them the initials and date. When general proprietary stamps are used, they must be so effaced.

It will be sufficient, if proprietary medicines and preparations, perfumery, and cosmetics, be stamped according to their retail price or value in the vicinity of the place of manufacture, although that be less than the sum for which they are sold. And any person who offers or exposes for sale, any of these articles, will be deemed to be the manufacturer, and will be subject to the liabilities and penalties imposed for the sale of such articles without the use of the proper stamp. When the medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics have been imported into this country, and are sold in the original and unbroken packages, in which the foreign manufacturer placed them, no penalty is incurred by the neglect to use the proper stamp. But where the packages are opened and broken, stamps should be affixed to the articles, in addition to the import duties.

"All medicines, preparations, compositions, perfumery, cosmetics, cordials, and other liquors, intended for exportation, and composed wholly or in part of domestic spirits, may be manufactured in bonded warehouse, and removed without stamps."

Otherwise, the making, preparing, selling, or removing for sale or consumption, of any of the articles we have named as subject to the stamp duties, without the affixing of the appropriate stamps, subjects the person so doing to a penalty of fifty dollars for each omission. The penalty for removal of stamps from those articles is fifty dollars and the forfeiture of the article; and for any attempt to evade this duty, the penalty is one hundred dollars, and the forfeiture of the article. It will be hardly necessary to say that the stamps used must be proprietary, and not ordinary legal stamps, such as are properly placed upon checks, receipts, etc.

No stamp tax is imposed upon medicines sold, which are mixed or compounded according to the prescription of a physician or surgeon. Neither is any tax imposed upon any uncompounded drug or chemical. But "all medicinal articles, whether simple or compounded by any rule, authority, formula published or unpublished, which are put up in a style or manner similar to that of patent or proprietary medicines in general, or advertised in newspapers or by public handbills, for popular sale and use, as having any special proprietary claim to merit, or to any peculiar advantage in mode of preparation, quality, use, or effect, whether such claim be real or pretended, are liable to the tax."

Once again, the law imposes no tax upon certain medicines often compounded by apothecaries, according to certain formulas laid down in the dispensatories, etc. Upon this point it defines as follows: "No stamp tax shall be imposed . . . . . upon any medicine compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopœia, or of which the full and proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, or in any pharmaceutical journal now issued by any incorporated college of pharmacy, unless sold or offered for sale or advertised under some other name, form, or guise than that under which they are severally denominated and laid down in such pharmacopœias, dispensatories or journals."

CHAPTER VII.

REVENUE LAWS RELATING TO DISTILLED SPIRITS.

THE act imposing taxes on spirits and alcohol is too lengthy to be inserted in these pages in full, and no attempt will be made to give more than a general outline of its provisions and requirements. For minute details, the reader is referred to the law itself, as passed July, 1868.

Upon all distilled spirits is required the payment of a tax of fifty cents on each proof gallon, before it is removed from the distilling warehouse. Every proprietor, and every person in any way interested in any of the distilling apparatus, is liable for the payment of the tax, which is to be a first lien on the liquor, the distillery, the implements used, and the ground upon which the establishment is situated. Proof spirits is defined to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one-half its volume of alcohol, of a specific gravity of .7939, at 60° Fahrenheit. In all sales of spirits, a gallon is taken to be a gallon according to the foregoing standard. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has power to prescribe meters for use in any distillery, and when he does so, the owner or agent must attach such meter at his own expense.

“Distilled spirits,” in the language of the act, “spirits, alcohol, and alcoholic spirits, within the true meaning of this act, is that substance known as ethyl alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirits of wine, which is commonly produced by the fermentation of grain, starch, molasses, or sugar, including all dilutions and mixtures of this substance, and the tax shall attach to this substance as soon as it is in existence as such.”

Every still or distilling apparatus set up must be registered with the assistant assessor of the division where situated; its kind, cubic contents, owner, with his place of residence, and its purpose, must be stated; under a penalty for neglect, of not less than one hundred dollars fine, and not less than one month's imprisonment. Notice must also be given to the assessor of the district of the owner's name and residence, or, if a company or firm, of the name and place of residence of each member thereof, and also of the place where the business is carried on, and whether it be distilling or rectifying. In case of a distiller, the notice shall also state the kind of stills, the contents and capacity thereof—in short, shall give full particulars of the minutiae of his business. The same is required of the rectifier.

Every distiller shall, before commencing business, file a bond, with two sureties, at least, to be approved by the commissioner, faithfully to comply with the provisions of the law. Such bond must not be for less than double the amount of the tax on the spirits that can be produced in his distillery in fifteen days, and in no case can be less than five thousand dollars. The distiller must be owner in fee of the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, or he must file with the assessor the written consent of the owner that the United States shall have priority of lien for taxes. If the distiller be owner, and the land be encumbered, the person having a lien thereon must give a like written consent. Where the owner of the distillery or distilling apparatus has a term of years only in the land, his land, for its appraised amount, with two sureties, may be accepted in lieu of the written consent of the owner of the land where the still was erected, prior to July, 1868.

An accurate plan of the distillery and apparatus must be made, showing every part of its construction and working. One copy of such plan must be kept displayed in some conspicuous part of the distillery, and two copies are to be furnished to the assessor; every alteration to be noted and added. The assessor is also required to make a survey of the premises, to estimate the capacity of any apparatus thereon, and to forward a written report of the same to the commissioner; he shall also furnish the distiller with a copy. If the commissioner is satisfied that error has occurred, he shall order another survey to be made. The process of distilling and rectifying are not both to be carried on within a distance of six hundred feet. And no still must be used in or around any dwelling house, or upon any vessel or boat, or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar, or ether, are manufactured or produced; or where sugar or syrups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or where any other business is carried on.

Manufacturers of stills or other vessels to be used for the purpose of distilling, are required to give notice to the assessor of the district where such article is to be used, of its capacity, the time when it is to be removed, and by whom it is to be employed; and the consent of such assessor must be obtained before such vessel can be used.

Every distiller is required to provide a warehouse, to be situated on the distillery premises, and to be used only for the storage of distilled spirits, of his own manufacture. No dwelling house is to be used for that purpose, and there must be no opening leading to the distillery, or any other room or building. Such warehouse, when approved by the commissioner, is to be regarded as a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be under the control of the collector of the district, and in charge of a store-keeper, to be appointed by the commissioner. The law also requires the erection, in a room to be used for that purpose alone, of two or more receiving cisterns, so constructed as to be entirely open to the inspection of the revenue officer; each cistern to be of sufficient capacity to hold all spirits distilled during any one day of twenty-four hours. The key of the room containing said cisterns shall be kept by the gauger assigned for that duty, and under his supervision, and in the presence of the store-keeper, the liquor shall be drawn off into casks, and removed directly to the warehouse after three days.

Every person engaged in distilling or rectifying spirits must place and keep on the outside of his place of business a sign, with plain letters, not less than three inches in length, stating the nature of the business transacted therein. Such person is forbidden to erect a wall of more than five feet in height around his distillery premises, and must furnish keys of the premises to the assessor when required. Books must be kept, in which shall be entered the kind and quantity of materials purchased for the production of spirits, with other details, too numerous to enter here. On the first, eleventh, and twenty-first days of each month, or within five days thereafter, every distiller must render to the assistant assessor an account taken from his books, stating the quantity and kind of materials used for the production of spirits each day, and the number of wine gallons and of proof gallons of spirits produced and placed in store-house; which account shall be verified on oath. These books are to be always open to the inspection of any revenue officer, and shall be kept for two years after they are filled up.

No material is to be used, or spirit to be removed during the absence of the storekeeper, who is to have charge of the distillery, and to keep an account of the transactions carried on therein. The assessor is to estimate the quantity of spirits produced, from the amount of material consumed, and if the distiller has not made a proper return, he shall be assessed for the deficiency.

Every distiller is deemed, by the provisions of the act, to commence work at noon on the third day after the approval of his bond, and to continue until he give notice to the assistant assessor. If he give such notice to the assessor, stating that he will suspend work on a certain day, the assessor must proceed on that day to fasten securely the door of the furnace or boiler, so that no fire be lighted. On the distiller's giving notice that he will resume work, the assistant assessor, at the time named, may unlock the doors as aforesaid.

Distilled spirits are to be drawn from the receiving cisterns into casks, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure; and must be marked by the gauger—who shall also prove and gauge each cask—by cutting on each cask the number of wine gallons and proof gallons of the contents thereof. After the removal of the casks to the warehouse, which shall be done immediately after marking, the gauger, in the presence of the storekeeper, must place on the head of each cask an engraved stamp, signed by the collector of the district, the storekeeper, and the gauger, indicating the number of proof gallons contained therein, the name of the distiller, the date of receipt into the warehouse, and the number of the cask. The owner or distiller must enter the spirits for deposit, on the first, eleventh and twenty-first days of each month; the entry to state the kind of spirits, the whole number of casks, the marks and numbers thereon, the number of gallons, and the amount of tax thereon—all to be verified on oath. The distiller or owner must also give his bond with surety for the payment of said tax, before removal of the spirits from the warehouse.

Upon application to the collector of the district, any spirits may be withdrawn from warehouse, after payment of the tax thereon. The collector having issued his order for such removal, the gauger must mark on each cask, before its withdrawal, the number of proof gallons, the name of the person by whom the tax has been paid, the date of such payment, the name of the distiller, and the name of the person to whom, and the place where it is to be delivered. This stamp is to be erased, when the cask is emptied, by cutting or burning a cancelling line across it. The stamps used for the payment of the tax may be obtained from the collector, and bear upon their face the number of gallons on which such tax has been paid.

If any distiller desires to reduce the capacity of the distillery, he shall give notice to the assessor, of the quantity of spirits he wishes thereafter to produce every twenty-four hours; and thereupon the assessor shall proceed to securely fasten a sufficient number of the tubs, to reduce the capacity to the required amount. It is also enacted that the revenue officers shall have authority to order that the water be drawn off, and the tubs or worms cleansed, at any time when not at work. They are also vested with full power to make, at any time, complete examination of the premises, and all the apparatus, and have the right to break through doors, windows, etc., if admission cannot be otherwise gained. The owners or operatives are required to furnish them every needful facility for making such examinations. If suspicious of the existence of concealed apparatus, the officers may break up ground, or any part of the premises, in the search therefor.

No material must be mashed, nor any still used between the hours of eleven on any Saturday night, and one on Monday morning. All distilled spirits, in casks or packages containing more than ten gallons, must be removed from the place of manufacture or preparation, between sunrise and sunset. All distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a distillery or distillery warehouse, not having been removed from thence according to the provisions of this act, are declared forfeited to the United States. In case of seizure in such case, the burden of proof is upon the person claiming the liquor, who is required to show the absence of fraud. No ingredient or substance must be added to such spirits, before the tax thereon is paid.

The act also provides that no distillery or apparatus for distilling, seized for any violation of the law, shall be released to the claimant before judgment, except in case of distilleries, for which the special tax has been paid, producing one hundred and fifty gallons or more per day, upon the products of which distillery, fifty or more head of live stock are depending for food. Such premises may be released to the claimant, on a bond being given for their full appraised value.

Rectifiers, wholesale liquor dealers, and compounders of liquors, are required to enter in a book to be kept by them, the date when, the name of the person from whom, and the place whence, any spirits are received; by whom rectified, distilled, or compounded, and when and by whom inspected; and, if in the original package, the number of gallons, wine and proof, the kind of spirit, and the stamps thereon. When such person or persons sends out any spirits, he shall make a like particular entry, including the name of the persons to whom they are to be sent. These books of entry are to be open to the inspection of any revenue officer, and are to be kept two years, at least, after being filled up. No rectifier, compounder, or liquor dealer, wholesale or retail, is allowed to purchase distilled spirits, in quantities greater than twenty gallons, from any other person than an authorized rectifier of distilled spirits, compounder of liquors, distiller, or wholesale liquor dealer. This, however, does not apply to judicial sales, nor to sales at public auction, by an auctioneer who has paid a special tax as such.

Liquors drawn from one cask into any other, containing less than ten gallons, must be re-gauged, inspected, and marked.

Upon the subject of imitation wines, champagnes, etc., the law enacts as follows: "On all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, and made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, but not made from grapes grown in the United States, and on all liquors not made from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries grown in the United States, but produced by being rectified or mixed with distilled spirits, or by the infusion of any matter in spirits to be sold as wine, or by any other name, there shall be levied and paid a tax of six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing more than one pint, and not more than one quart; or three dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one pint; and at the same rate for any quantity of such merchandise, however the same may be put up, or whatever be the package. And any person manufacturing, compounding, or putting up such wines, shall, without previous demand, make return, under oath or affirmation to the assistant assessor, on the first and fifteenth day of each and every month, or within five days thereafter, of the entire amount of such wines manufactured and sold or put up and sold during the first fifteen days of the month, and the residue of the month, respectively, except when the wines so manufactured or put up are used exclusively by the family of the person manufacturing the same; and the tax herein imposed shall be payable at the time such return is made." Then follow provisions for collecting, where no return is made; and the penalty for neglecting to make such return.

Alcohol and rum, in quantities not less than two thousand gallons, may be exported with the privilege of drawback, on application to the collector of customs at any port of entry. Each package so exported must contain not less than thirty gallons. The drawback allowed on alcohol and rum on which taxes have been paid already, shall include the taxes levied and paid on such articles, not, however, exceeding sixty cents per proof gallon.

All forfeited spirits sold by order of court, or under process of distraint, are to be sold subject to tax; and the purchaser must at once, and before he takes possession of such spirits, pay the tax thereon. For the violation or attempt to evade any of the provisions of this act, heavy penalties are laid down. All carriers are forbidden to transport, any empty cask or package, the stamps upon which have not been effaced—also under penalty for so doing.

Distillers are required to pay a special tax, as follows:—Those producing one hundred barrels (counting forty gallons proof spirits to the barrel) or less, within the year, are required to pay four hundred dollars. For each such barrel in addition to that number, they must pay four dollars. No tax, however, as we have stated, is imposed upon any still, or other apparatus used by chemists or druggists in the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical purposes.

Rectifiers of distilled spirits, rectifying two hundred barrels or less, of distilled spirits, (forty gallons to the barrel) are required to pay two hundred dollars. Fifty cents must be paid on each barrel in excess of that number.

Every person who, by mixing wine, spirits, or other liquor with any materials, manufactures "any spurious imitation or compound liquors for sale under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, spirits, cordials or wine bitters, or any other name, shall be regarded as a compounder of liquors; and shall pay twenty-five dollars special tax."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIPS.

PARTNERSHIPS, or associations in business, have become so common in almost every community, that the laws regulating their internal construction and external workings have received much attention from legal scholars. While the complete and thorough knowledge of the principles involved, and of the rules established by a multitude of decisions, can only be obtained by the patient research and discriminating study belonging peculiarly to the legal profession, those who are engaged in business, and are partners themselves, may, and should, have some idea of the nature of their rights, duties, and obligations as such. We only propose in this little work, intended for one important branch of the mercantile polity, to state some of the general principles regulating trade associations, referring those in the course of whose experience in business knotty points arise to more extended treatises and to experienced counsel for full information.

When two or more persons unite their labor, skill, and property, or any of them, for the purpose of transacting business, they are said to be in partnership. The articles of agreement usually drawn and signed before the commencement of active operations, should specify what each is to contribute to the common stock, whether labor or capital, and the share of the profits which each is to enjoy. But it is not necessary that the contract shall be in writing, although it is desirable that it should be so, for a partnership may be formed, and its terms decided by parol or word of mouth. And an agreement between two or more persons to combine effects and share the profit and loss of a general or particular business, will constitute in most cases a partnership, whether such agreement be verbal or written, and under seal. Incorporated companies, however, cannot be considered as partnerships, even though created expressly for the purpose of trade. The stockholders in such companies are only liable to the extent of their interest, and it requires a special provision in the act of incorporation to render them personally liable.

The same general rules of law which decide the right of persons to contract on their individual account, will apply to their partnership engagements. An infant is not bound by the contracts of trade he may enter into. But if he has, during his minority, been concerned in a partnership, he must, within a reasonable time after arriving at age, notify the public of his disaffirmance of contracts made therein, or he will be regarded as having ratified them, and be bound thereby. Parties dealing with an infant partner are held to their part of the engagement if he performs his.

By the common law, and by statute, in most of the States, married women, whose husbands have deserted them, or are absent at sea, etc., are allowed to contract as single persons. But a married woman, who resides with her husband, is regarded as his agent, if she transacts business, and he uses or enjoys the profits thereof.

Partnerships are either universal, general or special. The first species exists when all the capital, labor, and skill of all the parties are united. The second is where the combination extends only to general business. And the third is where the partnership is limited to some particular branch of trade. In any of these species, it is not necessary that all of the members shall bring capital into the concern. The money of one may be set off against the labor of another, and the peculiar skill of a third. But each must bring into the business something that is valuable.

Any species of property may be held in partnership, and all that is so held, will be liable for its debts. Real estate bought with partnership funds, or brought into a firm as a part of the capital contributed, will generally be regarded and treated as personal property by the courts, until the obligation of the partners, as such, to outside parties, and to each other, are settled. But after such settlement is concluded, the share of each partner will be considered as real estate, and the widow will be entitled to dower therein. When men engage in trade, they subject all the property employed to liability for the payment of debts contracted in the course of that trade, but if, after a final account be taken, any property be left, it reverts to its original character as real or personal property.

A new partner can never be introduced without the consent of all the members of the firm, for the partnership must always be voluntary. And one partner, by selling out his interest, will not make his vendee a member of the concern, without the consent of the others. The effect of such a sale would generally be to put an end to the partnership, and cause a settlement of its affairs; when the person to whom the share was sold would be entitled to the balance belonging to the retired partner. When the members of a firm disagree as to any particular transaction, the will of the majority will govern, provided such will be not repugnant to the original contract entered into. But, as a matter of course, all are to be consulted. No alteration of the articles of partnership can be legally made, except with the consent of all the parties, and if some of them be determined in carrying out a policy foreign to the object of those articles, there is no remedy but dissolution. In such case, the party acting in such a manner as to cause the dissolution, would be liable for damages to the others. It is very important, therefore, that the agreement be carefully entered into, and its terms accurately laid down, since each of the partners has full power to bind the firm, and the bonds which hold them together must always be, in a great degree, voluntary.

The responsibility of partners to each other will depend upon their contracts between themselves; but those contracts do not measure their liability to outside parties. They will be responsible, ordinarily, for the debts of the partnership, although there be a different understanding and arrangement among themselves. The liability of persons to third parties, as partners, may be created, either by holding themselves out to the public as such, or by partaking of the net profits. By claiming to be partners, they induce others to trust to the firm; and by partaking of the profits, they diminish the fund to which creditors must resort for the payment of their claims. But if it be agreed that a clerk shall be paid a salary proportioned to the profits made, this will not constitute him a partner, nor render him liable for the firm's debts. For the agreement is entered into in order to stimulate the person employed to use his best ability in advancing the interests—and increasing the income—of the business, and he has nothing to do with controlling it, in any way.

Each person who is really a partner, is liable for the whole amount of the debts of the firm, whatever be his proportion of interest, or the arrangement between the members themselves. An exception to this rule, however, exists in the case of "limited" partnerships, and will be referred to hereafter. It may be agreed that one partner shall have a share of the profits made in a business, and shall not be answerable to outside parties for losses. This contract will be binding upon the parties to it, but, as we have seen, will not prevent such person from being liable to third parties who deal with the firm, and are ignorant of the arrangement.

While the partnership continues, one member cannot, in general, sue another at law, upon a matter which will require an examination of the accounts of the firm. But upon outside matters, not involving such consideration, actions may be brought at any time, and after a final settlement, each partner may sue for the balance found to be due him. It was an old rule of law that a suit could not be maintained by one firm against another, when one or more individuals were members of both ; but the statutes of some of the States, at least, have changed the law in this respect.

Dormant and secret partners are liable when discovered. But after they cease to take a part of the profits, they are not liable for the debts subsequently contracted, provided those who ascertained their connection with the firm also have notice of their retirement. A nominal partner, or one who allows his name to appear, without having any actual interest in the trade, is also liable. For his supposed connection with the firm will probably induce some to give it credit. But a person who joins a partnership as a member does not assume the previous debts of the business, unless there be an express agreement that he shall do so.

One who withdraws from a firm is not liable for debts afterwards contracted, if he give proper notice to customers and the public. But if he fail to give such notice, or if he still continue, notwithstanding his pretended retirement from the business, to receive a share of the profits, he will be bound. But one who is aware of the actual withdrawal of the partner cannot hold him liable, even though he has failed to properly advertise the fact. To all persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm, actual notice of a change therein should be given ; but as to others, advertisement will, in general, be sufficient.

The act of each member of a firm in transactions within the scope of the partnership business, is the act of all, and binds all. Each one is the agent of all the rest, and has the power to dispose of the whole right and interest of all the partners in the name of the firm. He may sell the whole of the personal property, in mercantile partnerships, as if he were sole owner, and his contracts of purchase will also bind the rest. Even if the act be contrary to a private agreement made between the members, it will bind them all, if the other party has no knowledge of any such arrangement. But the dissenting partners have the right to notify the person with whom their associate is dealing before the arrangement with him is completed, that they do not authorize his act ; and in such case they will not be liable unless they afterwards in some way ratify the transaction. In a commercial partnership, each member has a general authority to bind the rest, by signing, accepting, and endorsing negotiable paper. And even where it is agreed in the articles that no partner shall sign such paper in the name of the firm, if one does so the rest will be bound by it in the hands of bona fide holders. But where the nature of the business does not require that such acts be done, there is no such implied authority. Thus one of a firm of attorneys cannot bind the rest by signing a note in their name, unless special license so to do be established.

But while, as we have seen, each member of a commercial or mercantile firm has the right to issue their negotiable paper in the course of their ordinary business transactions, he has no right to use it for the payment of his own private debts. And if such partnership paper be received from one partner, without the knowledge and consent of the others, for a debt known by the creditor to be a private one, the firm will not be bound. In such cases, the presumption will always be against the good faith of the transaction. But where a note so given for a private debt passes into the hands of a bona fide holder, who has no notice, either actual or constructive, he can look to the firm for payment.

In general, one partner has the power to sell, mortgage, or pledge the entire stock in trade, and to compound or discharge the partnership debts, without the concurrence of his fellows. And should one member borrow money on the credit of the firm, they would be responsible for it, although the borrower misappropriated the money. The placing of this great amount of power in the hands of each, is necessary to the attainment of the ends for which these combinations of money and labor are made. But contracts, in order to bind a firm, must be made in their name, or it must appear that the debt was incurred for partnership purposes, or only an individual liability will follow. If it appear that the agreement was on partnership account, it will not be necessary that the names of all the partners be signed.

It must be expressly understood, however, that the power of one member of a firm to bind the rest extends only to those transactions that are within the scope of the partnership business. A person who contracts with a partner upon a matter outside of the ordinary employment of the concern, will have to look to the individual with whom he deals. While it is necessary that each member of a business association shall have sufficient power to attend to all the transactions in the line of that business, still it would not be right to confer upon such members the power to bind each other, in matters outside thereof. And, as we have already seen, where the nature of the employment of a firm is not such as to require that negotiable paper shall be issued, endorsed, or accepted, one partner cannot bind the others by so doing.

If a partner borrow money on his own private credit, the firm will not be responsible to the lender for it, although it has been used in their business. But if the money in such case be obtained not expressly upon the individual credit of the partner, the firm will be liable. And if one who is a trustee use the trust funds in the business of the concern in which he is a partner, with the knowledge and consent of the others, they will be bound. From vol. 1 of Parsons on Contracts, page 158, we take the following:

“If a person outside lend money to be used by the borrower in his business, the lender to receive interest, and in addition thereto a share of the profits of the business, a question may arise whether he is a lender on usury, or a partner. He would seem, indeed, to be both; only a usurer as between the lender and borrower, but a partner as to third persons; and it may depend upon the manner in which the question is presented whether the character of a usurer is to be fixed upon him. If he sues the borrower for repayment of the money, it seems to be competent for the borrower to allege in his defence the usurious character of the loan. But if a third party, who is a creditor of the borrower, upon a debt which has arisen in the business in which the money was lent to be used, sues the lender as a partner, on the ground that he took away profits to which the creditor might look for his debt, the lender will be held as such partner, and it is not competent for him to set up his contract as usurious, for he may not rest his defence upon his own wrong.”

The trespasses or torts of a partner will render the firm responsible only when they are done in the ordinary course of the business, and when such business is the means of enabling the wrong to act, or furnishes the opportunity for the commission of the injurious deed. For any fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment by one of the partners, the firm will be liable. In any case, however, if the third party with whom the partner deals is aware that he is acting in bad faith, or exceeding the limits of his authority, such party cannot look to the partnership, but must rely upon the credit of the member with whom he contracts.

In any legal or business matter, notice to one partner is notice to all. And a release of one partner in a joint debt is a release of all. Each one also has the right to release a partnership debt, and such act will operate against all. But a release, to have the effect to discharge all, must be under seal. And the acquittance of a partnership debt by one member will not be binding if it be given in consideration of the discharge of a private debt of the partner to one who has notice of the circumstances.

As a rule, one partner cannot bind the others by signing a deed, unless the special and proper authority so to do be expressly given to him. It has been held, however, that where one partner signed and sealed a deed for his copartners, in their presence, and by their consent, they were bound thereby. And it may be considered as being the law in most of the States, that previous consent or subsequent ratification will render valid the specialty signed by one partner for the others, even though such consent or ratification be by parole. One partner cannot submit a partnership matter to arbitration without the concurrence of his copartners. But it is believed that a different practice prevails in Kentucky and Pennsylvania. And one member of a firm cannot bind his associates by signing a guaranty of the debt of a third person in their name, or by entering into an engagement as surety for another in a matter unconnected with the ordinary business of the concern. But the acknowledgment of a joint debt by one partner, before a dissolution, will remove the bar of the statute of limitations, and prevent the same from being "outlawed." If the firm be dissolved, however, the acknowledgment by one partner of a debt already barred by the statute, will not revive it as to his associates.

As the property, of every kind, of a firm in trade, is liable in the first place for the partnership debts, the private creditor can only attach and sell on execution the share of the debtor in whatever may be the balance remaining after those debts are paid. And in serving a writ of execution for such private claim, the officer cannot, in general, take actual possession of the effects of the firm. He can only demand what the debtor had—that is, the right to have a settlement of the partnership affairs, and the balance, if any, ascertained to be his, after the payment in full of all the joint liabilities. But the practice, in some of the States, is for the officer to take all the joint property of the firm into his possession, when he has the same right to demand an account and settlement.

Partners will be liable to the firm for damage or loss caused by their negligence or misconduct, and are bound to exercise their best judgment, and the utmost good faith in all business transactions. They will also be liable for any infringement or violation of the articles of partnership, and if one partner conduct himself in such a manner as to defeat the intention and object of the association, he will be responsible for the damage caused. Neither is it permitted for any member of a firm to carry on or engage in any other business not compatible with the best interest of the partnership. Where one partner causes a dissolution of the firm, contrary to the terms of the agreement entered into, he will be responsible to the amount of the profits that would have been made, had the association continued, provided they can be proved.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS.

IN the States of Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia,

Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and perhaps in one or two others, laws have been enacted authorizing the formation of partnerships with somewhat different rights and liabilities from those that attach at common law. These statutes differ from one another somewhat in their details, but their general provisions are as follows :

There are one or more persons who are called general partners, and are liable just as are the members of ordinary business firms. They alone are allowed to attend to the public affairs of the partnership, and to sign for and bind the same. Their names, only, must appear in the firm name or style, without any addition of the term "company." In addition to these, there are one or more persons who are special partners, who contribute a certain amount of capital (which must generally be actually paid in) for the transaction of the business contemplated. The agreement must be in writing, and must specify the names of the several partners ; the amount contributed by those who are only special ; the intended duration of the compact, etc. ; which contract, after being signed and acknowledged before a magistrate, is to be recorded, and its terms advertised.

All suits at law must be brought by and against the general partners, and they are obliged to account to each other, and to the special partners, for the proper conduct of affairs. It is usually provided or stipulated that the general or special partners may, with the consent of each other, assign all their interest in the concern, without causing thereby a dissolution of the partnership. The special partners are only liable for partnership debts to the amount of the capital which they have brought in. It is absolutely necessary that the requirements of the statutes as to limited partnerships be exactly conformed to, and their directions followed, or all the partners, whether general or special, will become alike personally liable to the full extent of the obligations of the firm.

For full information as to the details of the legal provisions on the subject of limited partnership, the reader is referred to the statute books of the various States.

DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP.

If there be no specified period during which the partnership is to continue, any member thereof may withdraw at any time, and thereby cause a dissolution. And it is not even necessary that he shall give previous notice of his intention, although, as a matter of course, it would be more honorable to do so, when possible. But when the articles provide that the union shall continue for a certain definite period, there seems to be some doubt as to the ability of any partner to withdraw and dissolve it, before the expiration of that time, without the consent of all. And a member of a firm withdrawing against the will of his associates, would certainly be liable to an action for damages. But we think that the later and more reliable decisions have established the principle that one party may assign his interest in—and thus dissolve—a partnership, before the specified time has passed. For the holding of partners in a concern, against their will, would be of very little benefit to any party, and the injured members have their right of action for breach of contract.

When the time agreed upon for the duration of the partnership has expired, the firm is at once dissolved, unless a renewal be agreed upon. And when the compact is formed for a particular transaction, it is at an end as soon as that business is completed. There are also other ways in which a partnership may be dissolved, even before the time limited has expired, and some of them will be named.

The death of one partner will at once work a dissolution, unless the original articles of agreement provide for its continuance, in some manner. Thus, it may be stipulated that upon the death of a partner, his heirs, personal representatives, or some other specified person or persons shall take his place. But where there is no such agreement, as soon as one partner dies, the survivors become vested with the whole of the property of the partnership, for the purpose of settling its affairs. If they do not proceed to do so within a reasonable time, and account to the representatives of the deceased partner for the disposition of the funds, the courts will step in, and appoint a receiver, or take other measures for obtaining a settlement. The assets of the member of a firm, who is deceased, are liable for the partnership debts. But no new contracts, made otherwise than for the purpose of settling the business, entered into after the death of a partner, will bind his estate or representatives.

The courts will dissolve a partnership upon the petition of a member, and proof that his interests are about to be sacrificed by the wrongful conduct of his associates, and that by such conduct the property invested is liable to be wasted. But strong evidence will be required, before the court will interfere. If there be an abandonment, on the part of some of the partners, of the original objects of the coalition, and an abuse of good faith, or if one or more of the partners become incapacitated, through accident, or vicious habits, so that they cannot carry on the business, the court of equity will dissolve the association, and appoint a receiver. The petitioning partner must show such grounds of complaint as will satisfy the judges that the business cannot be conducted without serious damage. In one case it was laid down as law, that “a mere temptation to abuse partnership property is not sufficient to induce the court to interfere by injunction; but when a partner acts with gross impropriety or folly, and there is a strong probability that the safety of the firm, and the rights of creditors, depend upon the interference of chancery, it forms a proper case for the protection of that jurisdiction to be thrown over the concern."

But, as suggested by Judge Kent, business partnerships are similar to those entered into between husband and wife, (though perhaps not as easily dissolved, at present,) in that they are "for better or for worse," and for trivial or temporary causes, no dissolution will be decreed. But the court will sometimes, on the petition of one partner, restrain another from doing some improper and injurious act.

The insolvency or bankruptcy, either of one member or of the whole partnership, will dissolve it, and the dissolution dates from the time of the act of bankruptcy. The same result will follow if all the interest of one partner be taken and sold on execution, and also, as has been noticed, where one partner assigns all his interest in the concern. The insanity or incapacity of one or more partners will also work a dissolution.

After such dissolution of a partnership, none of the members thereof have any power to act for each other, further than may be actually necessary in settling the affairs of the firm. Either of the solvent partners may collect and settle the debts, and give discharges. When the death of a member has been the cause of dissolution, the surviving partner has the power to adjust the affairs of the former association, and suits at law must be brought against him. The courts will guard the interests of each member, and prevent fraudulent conduct on the part of any one. After allowing a reasonable time for the settlement, they will order that there be no further prosecution of the business, whatever, and when necessary, will appoint a receiver. After dissolution, the former partners have no power to bind each other, by any contracts of sale or purchase, or by signing, renewing, or transferring negotiable paper. And it has been held that even where a note was endorsed before the firm was dissolved, all the partners must unite in putting it into circulation, if not done until after the dissolution, in order to bind them.

As we have already mentioned, the joint creditors have the first lien upon the partnership property, and their claims are to be liquidated before there can be a division of such property, and also before the private debts can be satisfied. But, on the other hand, it is a rule of law, in many of the States, that the creditors of the firm cannot resort to the private estate of any partner, until his private creditors have been paid. In a few of the States, however, there are no preferences given as to the separate property of members of a firm.

Notice of the dissolution should be given to the public; for a firm would be bound by a contract subsequently made by one partner, in the name—and in the course of the ordinary business—of the former partnership, with one who was ignorant that it had ceased to exist. But when the dissolution is by operation of law, notice is not necessary. Persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm, should have actual information of its termination; but as to the general public advertisement in one or more of the public newspapers of the place or vicinity where the business has been conducted, will be sufficient. The question as to whether proper notice has been given, will depend much upon the circumstances of the case, and is to be decided by the jury. We have already referred to the necessity of notice in the case of the withdrawal of a partner, and it will not be necessary to say anything further upon that subject.

CHAPTER IX.

BANKRUPTCY UNDER THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

WHILE it is hoped that very few of our readers will experience the misfortunes that lead to and attend bankruptcy and insolvency, still, a knowledge of the legal provisions regulating the acts of the bankrupt and his creditors, must ever be important and useful to the man of business. We have, therefore, thought best to insert a short summary of the "Insolvent Law" as now in force, omitting many of the details, and referring to the law itself, with the various decisions that have been rendered under it, for complete information.

It will be proper for us to preface our statement of the general provisions of the "United States Bankrupt Act," as passed in 1867, by calling attention to the fact that by an amendment, approved July 27th, 1868, it was enacted, that no discharge under proceedings commenced after the first day of January, 1869, will be granted unless the assets of such debtor shall be "equal to fifty per centum of the claims proved against his estate, upon which he shall be liable as the principal debtor, unless the assent in writing of a majority in number and value of his creditors to whom he shall have become liable as principal debtor, and who shall have proved their claims, be filed in the case at or before the time of the hearing of the application for discharge."

To proceed to the enactments of the Act itself. The several District Courts of the United States are constituted courts of bankruptcy, and have jurisdiction, in their respective districts, of all matters and proceedings therein. The United States Circuit Courts are also vested with superintendence and jurisdiction, and are allowed to act as courts of equity. They have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Courts of the same district, of all suits which are brought by or against the assignee in bankruptcy, touching the property of any bankrupt.

In each of the congressional districts, the judges of the District Courts are required to appoint one or more registers in bankruptcy, whose powers and duties are as follows: To make adjudication in bankruptcy; to receive the surrender of any insolvent person ; to administer oaths ; to preside at meetings of creditors ; to take proof of debts ; to make computations of dividends, and all orders of distribution ; to audit and pass the accounts of assignee ; to grant protection ; to pass the last examination of a bankrupt, and, generally, to despatch such business as the district judge may direct. But no register has power to commit for contempt, or to hear a disputed adjudication ; but in all matters where an issue of fact or of law is raised and contested by any party to the proceedings, it is his duty to send the same into court for decision by the judge. The fees of such registers are to be paid to them by the parties for whom the services are rendered.

During the course of proceedings before the register, any party is at liberty to take the opinion of the district judge upon such points as may arise, which points are to be stated by the register in a short certificate to the judge. At any stage of the case, also, the parties concerned may state any questions, in a special case, for the opinion of the court ; which opinion, when given, will be final, unless it be agreed, in such special case, that either party may appeal. All persons refusing to attend before a register, in obedience to a summons, or declining to testify, or swearing and affirming falsely, are liable for contempt, and render themselves subject to fines and penalties.

Appeals may be taken from the District to the Circuit Courts, in all cases in equity, and writs of error lie from the former to the latter, in cases at law, when the debt or damages claimed exceed five hundred dollars ; and any claiming creditor or assignee who is dissatisfied with the allowance or disallowance of a claim, may appeal, by entering notice with the clerk of the District Court, within ten days. No appeal or writ of error will be granted from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court of the U. S., unless the matter in dispute exceed the sum of two thousand dollars.

Any person living within the jurisdiction of the United States, owing debts provable under this Act exceeding the amount of three hundred dollars, may apply by petition to the judge of the judicial district in which he has resided or transacted business for the six months (or longest period thereof) immediately preceding the time of filing such petition, setting forth his place of residence ; his inability to pay his debts in full ; his willingness to surrender all his estate for the benefit of his creditors, and his desire to obtain the benefit of the bankrupt act.

Having presented such petition, and annexed a list of his debts, and inventory of all his estate, or property, such person will be judged a bankrupt. The schedule of debts and inventory must be verified on oath before a register in bankruptcy, the court itself, or one of the commissioners of the Circuit Court ; and the former must contain a true statement of all the debts owed by such person, and to whom due, with the place of residence, if known, of each creditor. It must also define the nature of the debt, whether founded on written security, or otherwise; the true cause of such indebtedness, and the place where it accrued, with a list of existing securities, if any, given for the same. The inventory should describe all the debtor's estate, both real and personal, stating the situation of the same, and if any encumbrances be thereon, their nature and amount. This inventory, as well as the schedule, may be altered at any time, so as to correspond with the facts of the case.

The judge of the District Court, or any register of that court, designated by the judge, must then issue a warrant to the marshal of the district, requiring him to advertise in such newspapers as the judge may appoint, that the payment of any debts of the bankrupt to him, and the delivery of any of his property to him are forbidden by law; and also that a meeting of creditors to choose assignees, and prove debts, will be held on some specified day. At such meeting, the creditors are to choose one or more assignees of the estate of the debtor, and the choice shall be made by a majority in number and value of the creditors who shall have proved. In default of such choice, the register is to appoint, and if any assignee chosen or appointed, fail to signify, in writing, his acceptance, within five days, the judge or register may fill the vacancy. The judge may, in his own discretion, and must, if required by any creditor, demand a bond from the assignee for the faithful discharge of his duties.

As soon as such assignee is elected or appointed, the judge or register is required to convey to him, by an instrument under his hand, all the estate of the bankrupt, of every species, with all the papers relating thereto; and thereupon all property of such bankrupt becomes vested at once in him. And any attachment made within four months of the commencement of the proceedings, is dissolved. But the law allows the bankrupt to retain, for his own comfort, and the maintenance of his family, property as follows: His necessary household furniture, and such other necessities as the assignee may designate, but altogether such property must not exceed in value the sum of five hundred dollars; also the necessary wearing apparel of the bankrupt and his immediate family; the uniform and equipment of any person who is—or has been—a soldier in the militia, or in the service of the United States; such property as is exempted from attachment, seizure, or levy on execution, by the laws of the United States, and also such property, not included in the foregoing, as is exempted by the laws of the State in which the bankrupt is domiciled, to an amount not exceeding that allowed by such exemption laws in force in the year 1864.

The assignee has at once the right to sue for and recover the estate and effects of the bankrupt, and is at once substituted in his place as to all suits he may have pending. In case of the death, retirement, or removal of any assignee, suits commenced by him are to be continued by his successor. The debtor is required—at the request of the assignee—to execute all instruments that may be necessary to enable the former to come into full possession of the estate and effects of such debtor. And no person can maintain a suit against the assignee for any malfeasance, as such, without giving him twenty days' notice, that he may have an opportunity to make amends for the same.

Within six months after the assignment to him, the assignee must cause notice thereof to be recorded in the proper office in any county or place where the bankrupt may own land. He must also publish notice of his appointment, at least once a week, for three successive weeks, in such papers as may be designated by the court.

Such assignee, also, has power to sell all the unencumbered real and personal estate, on such terms as he judges to be most for the interest of the creditors, subject, however, to any order the court may make concerning such property or the sale thereof. He must also keep a regular account of all moneys that may come into his hands, and must keep such moneys, as well as all of the goods of the bankrupt, distinct and separate from his own. The court may, in case of delay from litigation or other cause, order the investment of the proceeds of the estate in proper securities. The assignee must give notice to all known creditors of meetings to be held, and of all dividends ordered, and for his services is to receive a reasonable compensation, to be decided upon by the court.

All debts due from the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication, as well as those existing, but not then payable, and also all demands for goods and chattels wrongfully converted by such bankrupt, may be proved against his estate. In all cases of contingent debts or liabilities, the creditor may have his claim therefor allowed, if he prove, before the order for the final dividend be given, that such debts have become certainly due. When the bankrupt is liable for rent, the creditor may prove for such an amount as may have become due up to the time of the bankruptcy, without reference to any stated time of payment. In case mutual credits and debts exist between the bankrupt and another, the accounts shall be set off against each other, and the balance only is to be claimed or paid; but no set-off of any claim purchased or obtained by the person offering it, after the filing of the petition, will be allowed. When a creditor holds a mortgage or pledge of real or personal property, he will only be allowed to prove the amount of his debt over and above the value of such property. But if such creditor choose, he can release his claim upon such property to the assignee, and then be admitted to prove his whole debt.

Every creditor proving his debt will be considered as waiving his right to maintain any action or suit against the bankrupt, and all proceedings commenced, or unsatisfied judgments already obtained, are deemed to be discharged. And if suit be commenced on a claim provable under this act, proceedings thereon may be stayed until the determination of the court in bankruptcy be ascertained. But there must be no unreasonable delay resulting therefrom.

Creditors residing within the judicial district in which the proceedings in bankruptcy are pending, must prove their debts before one of the registers of the court, in such district. Non-residents are allowed to prove their claims before any register in the district in which they may reside, or before any commissioner of the Circuit Court, authorized to administer oaths in such district. In order to secure the allowance of a claim, it must be verified by a deposition on oath, acknowledged before a register or commissioner, setting forth the demand; its consideration; that it is justly due from the bankrupt to the claimant; whether any securities are held therefor; whether any payments have been made on such claims; that the claimant has not—nor has any other person for his use—received any security or satisfaction whatever, other than that by him set forth; that the claim was not procured for the purpose of influencing the proceedings; and that no bargain has been entered into to sell or otherwise dispose of such claim, whereby the vote of such creditor or any other person in the proceedings under this act may be in any way influenced or affected. The oath or affirmation of the truth of the above facts must be made by the creditor personally, unless he is absent from the United States, or by some other good cause prevented, in which case it may be made by his attorney or authorized agent.

The court is required, upon the application of the assignee or a creditor, to examine the bankrupt or any other person who may be able to give evidence as to the validity of any claim made, on oath, and must reject all debts not duly proved, or when fraud, illegality, or mistake lie at their foundation. But all lawful and just claims are to be duly allowed, and a list thereof must be certified by one of the registers. Any person whose claim is rejected, has the right to appeal to the Circuit Court, and must file in the clerk's office thereof a statement, in writing, of his demand. Final judgment in this court is conclusive.

The court may, at any time, examine the bankrupt as to all matters relating to the condition of his property, his trade, accounts, and debts. Such examination must be in writing, and be signed by the bankrupt. His wife may also be examined as to the like facts, and if she refuse to attend and testify, in obedience to an order of the court, the bankrupt will not be discharged, unless he be able to prove that he is not able to control his wife.

All creditors whose debts are duly proved and allowed, are to share in the property and estate pro rata without any preference being given, except that wages due to "any operative, clerk, or house servant, to an amount not exceeding fifty dollars, for labor performed within six months next preceding the adjudication in bankruptcy, shall be entitled to priority and first paid in full." But no debt proved by any person, liable as bail or surety for the bankrupt, will be paid, until satisfactory evidence is produced that such person has actually paid the amount.

At the end of three months from the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy, or as much earlier as may be directed by the court, a general meeting of the creditors will be called. At such time, the assignee is required to exhibit to the creditors true and just accounts of all his proceedings, receipts, and payments. The creditors shall then decide (but provided one half in value of such creditors do not attend, it is the duty of the assignee to determine,) whether any, and, if so, what part of the proceeds of the estate shall be divided among the creditors. If a dividend be thus ordered, the sums must be paid to the creditors by the assignee, in such manner as the court may direct.

Another meeting, with like proceedings, shall be held at the expiration of the next three months, or earlier; and at the third meeting, the final dividend will be declared, unless some suit at law be pending, or other effects come into the hands of the assignee; in which latter case, the assignee must convert such effects as he may receive into money, as soon as expedient, and the same is to be divided within two months thereafter. Such further meetings may be held, and dividends declared, as may be necessary, but after the third meeting, no further will be called unless ordered by the court. No dividend already made will be affected by the fact that debts are subsequently proved, but the creditors thus proving, will receive an amount equal to that paid to each of the other creditors, before any further dividend will be paid to the latter.

Before the final dividend is declared, the assignee shall submit his account to the court, file the same, and give notice thereof to the creditors, as well as of the fact that at a time specified in such notice, he will apply for a settlement of his account and to be relieved from liability as an assignee. At such time, the court will audit and pass the accounts of the assignee, and, if correct, he will be discharged from further responsibility. It will also order a dividend of the remaining estate and effects, or such part thereof as to it seems proper and fit. In this final settlement, the following claims are entitled to priority, and are to be paid in full, in the following order :

“First ; the fees, costs and expenses of suits and of the several proceedings in bankruptcy under the act ; also expenses incurred in the custody of the property.

“Second ; all debts due to the United States, and all taxes and assessments under the laws thereof.

“Third ; all debts due to the State in which the proceedings in bankruptcy are pending, and all taxes and assessments made under the laws of such State.

“Fourth ; wages due to any operative, clerk, or house servant, to an amount not exceeding fifty dollars, for labor performed within six months next preceeding the first publication of the notice of proceedings in bankruptcy.

“Fifth ; all debts due to any persons who, by the laws of the United States, are, or may be entitled to a preference, in like manner as if this act had not been passed ; always provided that nothing contained in this act shall interfere with the assessment and collection of taxes by the authority of the United States, or any State.”

At any time after the expiration of six months from the adjudication of bankruptcy, (or, if no debts have been proved against the bankrupt, or, if no assets have come into the hands of the assignee, at any time within sixty days) and within one year from the said adjudication, the bankrupt may apply for a discharge from his debts. Notice shall then be given to all the creditors who have proved, to appear on a certain day and show cause why the application of the bankrupt shall not be granted. But if the debtor has been guilty of any fraud or gross negligence, or has squandered or wasted any part of his estate, or has spent any part of the same in gaming, a discharge shall not be granted to him, and if granted will be void.

The discharge thus given will release the bankrupt from all debts and liabilities, which were—or might have been—proved against his estate in bankruptcy. But no person who has been once discharged, and shall become a second time bankrupt, will be again released, without the consent, in writing, of three-fourths of his creditors, unless his estate is sufficient to pay seventy per centum of all the debts that may be proved against it. If, however, such bankrupt can prove that he has paid all his debts under the previous bankruptcy, or has been released therefrom, the fact that he has been previously bankrupt will not affect him.

Any creditor whose debt was proved or provable against the estate, may, within two years, apply in writing to the court to set aside and annul the discharge, on the ground of discovered fraud. If he prove the existence of such fraud, the discharge will be so set aside. And in any case, debts created by the embezzlement or fraud of a bankrupt, by his defalcation as a public officer, or by any breach of trust, will not be discharged.

When two or more persons, partners in trade, are adjudged bankrupt, a warrant will issue against all the joint stock and property of the partnership, as well as the separate stock of each of the partners. The assignee is then to be chosen by the creditors of the company, and is required to keep distinct accounts of the separate and the partnership property. After deducting all the expenses incurred, from the whole amount, the net proceeds of the joint stock will be devoted to the payment of the partnership creditors, and private effects to the payment of the claims of private creditors. Any balance remaining after the payment of one class of debts, will be placed in the fund for the liquidation of the other.

Any assignment, transfer, conveyance, sale, or other disposition of property, made in contemplation of insolvency, to one who has reason to believe the act to be so done, will be void, if it take place within six months next preceeding the filing of the bankrupt's petition.

The provisions regulating compulsory bankruptcy are as follows :

“Any person owing debts as aforesaid, who, after the passage of this act—shall depart from the State, district, or Territory, of which he is an inhabitant, with intent to defraud his creditors; or, being absent, shall, with such intent, remain absent; or shall conceal himself to avoid the service of legal process in any action for the recovery of a debt or demand provable under this act; or shall conceal or remove any of his property to avoid its being attached, taken, or sequestered on legal process; or shall make any assignment, gift, sale, conveyance, or transfer of his estate, property, rights, or credits, either within the United States or elsewhere, with intent to delay, defraud, or hinder his creditors; or who has been arrested and held in custody under or by virtue of mesne process of execution, issued out of any court of any State, district, or Territory within which such debtor resides or has property, founded upon a demand in its nature provable against a bankrupt's estate under this act, and for a sum exceeding one hundred dollars, and such process is remaining in force and not discharged by payment, or in any other manner provided by the law of such State, district, or Territory applicable thereto, for a period of seven days; or has been actually imprisoned for more than seven days, in a civil action, founded on contract, for the sum of one hundred dollars or upwards; or who, being bankrupt or insolvent, or in contemplation of bankruptcy or insolvency, shall make any payment, gift, grant, sale, conveyance, or transfer of money, or other property, estate, rights, or credits, or give any warrant to confess judgment, or procure or suffer his property to be taken on legal process, with intent to give a preference to one or more of his creditors, or to any person or persons who are or may be liable for him as endorsers, bail, sureties, or otherwise, or with the intent, by such disposition of his property, to defeat or delay the operation of this act; or who, being a banker, merchant, or trader, has fraudulently stopped or suspended, and not resumed payment of his commercial paper, within a period of fourteen days:—

“Shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy, and, subject to the conditions hereinafter prescribed, shall be adjudged a bankrupt, on the petition of one or more of his creditors, the aggregate of whose debts provable under this act amount to at least two hundred and fifty dollars, provided such petition is brought within six months after the act of bankruptcy shall have been committed.”

Upon the filing of the petition above-mentioned, if it appears that sufficient grounds exist therefor, the court may order the debtor to appear at a court of bankruptcy, to be held not less than five days after the service of the order, and show cause why the creditor's petition should not be granted. It may also prevent by injunction any transfer of the debtor's property; and, when necessary, may issue a warrant for his arrest. Upon the day appointed, if the notice has been duly served, or service be waived by the appearance of the debtor, the court will proceed to examine into the truth of the allegations set forth in the creditor's petition. If such allegations are found to be true, the debtor will be adjudged a bankrupt, and the proceedings as to his property shall be the same as prescribed in cases of voluntary bankruptcy.

At the first meeting of creditors, or at any such meeting, specially called for that purpose, and of which proper notice has been given, three-fourths in value of the creditors whose claims have been proved, may determine that the estate of the bankrupt shall be settled and distribution thereof made, by one or more trustees, to be nominated by themselves; and when it is proved to the satisfaction of the court, that the resolution was duly passed, and that the interests of the creditors will be promoted thereby, they will confirm the same, and direct that the estate of the bankrupt be conveyed to the trustees. These trustees have the same power to dispose of and convey the property of the bankrupt, as the debtor himself had, or as the assignees would have had, if the creditors had not determined that the estate should be settled by trustees. And the proceedings in bankruptcy will be similar to those prescribed in cases of voluntary bankruptcy, and therefore it will not be necessary for us to pursue the subject further.

The act also provides, that in case the bankrupt—by concealment, gaming, fraudulent transfers, or accounts, or in any other unjust manner defraud, or attempt to defraud his creditors, or other persons, he shall be punished by imprisonment, for a term not exceeding three years.

CHAPTER XI.

COPYRIGHTS.

IN order to secure the protection of the copyright laws, it is necessary for the author, designer, or proprietor of any article for which he desires a copyright, to deposit a printed copy of the title of such article in the Clerk's office of the District Court for the district in which he resides; and also to deliver to the said Clerk, within three months thereafter, a sample of such book, or other article. He is then entitled to receive a copy of the title of his work under the seal of the Court. For recording the title, the Clerk is allowed a fee of fifty cents, and the same amount for a certified copy. The proprietor is also required to forward to the Congressional Library, at Washington, a complete sample or copy of the article, within one month after its publication. (It is understood, of course, that the copyright laws, as a rule, only extend to the labels, engravings, or other designations placed upon patent or proprietary medicines.)

To secure the right of maintaining actions for the infringement of a copyright, the law requires that the proprietor shall insert on the title page of every book, and on the front or face of each and every other article, such as prints, labels, or engravings, the following words: "Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year —, by [the proprietor], in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of —." The insertion of such notice by one who has not secured a copyright, renders him liable to a fine of one hundred dollars; and the infringement of a copyright subjects the guilty party to a penalty of one dollar for every sheet that may be found in his possession, containing such unlawful copies, besides the forfeiture of all such sheets, and the plates on which the same may have been copied or printed. Non-residents, and those who are not citizens, are not protected. Actions for forfeitures and penalties must be commenced within two years.

The sole right of printing, publishing, and selling the patented articles belongs to the inventor, author, or designer, and his representatives or assigns, for the term of twenty-eight years. After that length of time, the author, etc., if living, and a citizen or resident of the United States, or his widow or children, if he be dead, may have the right continued for the further term of fourteen years, by complying with the regulations prescribed for obtaining the original copyright; and also advertising a copy of the record of the renewal in one or more newspapers printed in the United States.

Copyrights may be assigned by writing proved and acknowledged, in the like manner with deeds, in the same State where the assignment is made. Such assignment must be recorded in the office where the original copyright is registered, within sixty days, otherwise it will be void as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees without notice.

It has occurred to the publishers that a list of such books as meet the many wants of the drug trade (Chemistry, Pharmacy, Materia Medica, etc.) would be a desirable addition to the valuable information already given, and to further this end we append such that from their high order and accepted worth we particularly recommend, and in order to make it of still greater use, we add the names of the publishers, with the prices at which they will be furnished by your nearest bookseller, or will be forwarded, prepaid, by the respective publishers, on receipt of the price stated.

IT has been many months since we issued our Prospectus, and sent out our canvassers on this work. We promised a complete Register of the Drug Trade of this country. We have had the cities canvassed by competent agents, and a business card returned from each house to avoid errors in classifying and to insure correctness in spelling the names of firms or individuals. Our lists from the country towns have been corrected by the most prominent resident druggists, so that our subscribers can rely upon their correctness up to the present time. In some of the smaller towns and villages, where we found no regular druggist, we have given the country stores where a small assortment of drugs and patent medicines are usually kept on hand; these can be distinguished by the letters C. S. or G. S. being affixed. Our subscription list increased so rapidly that we concluded to stereotype our work before printing, so as to be able to supply all demands for future editions. We shall be thankful to receive notices of changes in name or style of firms, that we may insure correctness in our list. To the numerous gentlemen in the trade, who have rendered us so much assistance and information, we desire to return our most sincere thanks. We hope and believe that the Legal Directory and Register will meet the wants of the trade—in every branch. It has been carefully written and compiled by able, competent hands, and no expense spared to insure correctness. In the manufacture of the book, also, we have endeavored to include all that our taste and experience could obtain to make the volume handsome and attractive, as well as useful.

CHAMBERS'

Is black when first used and retains its color, flows freely from the pen, and will not corrode; warranted to give a perfect and enduring copy, is highly endorsed by leading Professors of Penmanship, and is used in the principal Banks, Railroad Offices, Commercial Colleges, Schools, and large establishments of the country. It is the result of eight years experimenting.

Many object to the light greenish color of Arnold's and other popular Writing Fluids, which turn black only after having been written some hours. To a person of imperfect sight a plain black ink is far preferable—others again object to keeping two kinds of ink, one for their books and another for copying purposes. This article possesses the great advantage of being a beautiful color when first used, and copying handsomely without blotting or smearing. Compare the price with other first class Inks.
